EDINBURGH AND LEITH,

WITH THEIR ENVIRONS,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF GRANTON, RESTALRIG, STOCKBRIDGE, NEWHAVEN, GORGIE, AND MURRAYFIELD.

EDINBURGH, the beautiful metropolis of Scotland, occupies a site in the northern part of the county of Edinburgh, or Midlothian, remarkable for its romantic inequalities, its rich historical reminiscences, and the beauty of its architectural features, within two miles from the south shore of the Frith of Forth; in lat. 55 deg. 57 min. 23 sec. N., and longitude 3 deg. 10 min. 30 sec. W.; distant from London 392 miles (by rail 427), 91 from Carlisle (110 by rail), 55 from Berwick-upon-Tweed (57½ by rail), nearly 44 from Glasgow (47½ by rail), 43 from Dundee (by rail 66), 109 from Aberdeen, 241 from Inverness, by Aberdeen, and 191 from Inverness by Perth.

ORIGIN, NAME, AND BRIEF NOTICE OF EVENTS CONNECTED WITH THE CITY.

The origin of Edinburgh, as of many other towns of high antiquity, is shrouded in great obscurity. There can be little doubt, however, that the town grew up around the lofty castle rock, a fortress almost impregnable before the introduction of gunpowder, and which rises abruptly with precipitous sides on the north, west, and south, sloping eastward into a ridge, steep both on its northern and southern sides. It was on this ridge that the town first began to be built. The most ancient name on record applied to the rock fortress is Casteth Mynyd Agnes, "the fortress of the hill of Saint Agnes." The name Edinburgh is said to be derived from Edwin, an Anglo-Saxon King of Northumbria, who died in 634. The Lothians and whole south-east of Scotland were at that time part of the kingdom of Northumbria; the northern parts of the country were then the scene of continual wars.

An old Gaelic name of Edinburgh is Dunedin. For some centuries the town was confined entirely to the ridge already noticed. On the north was a lake, now drained, the North Loch. On other sides it was defended by a wall, of which some traces still remain. After the cession of Lothian to the Scots, in 1020, the castle often became the residence of the Scottish monarchs, and in the 12th century David I. made it his favourite habitation. Dwellings now multiplied around it, and David founded the Abbey of Holyrood, whose canons he empowered to erect a suburb westward of their abbey; and this suburb soon united itself with Edinburgh, which had rapidly extended itself down the declivity of the castle eastward. The monks gave the name of Canonsburg, or Canongate, to their new town, which appellation it still bears. The long street thus formed between the abbey and the castle consisted, it is presumed, of very humble dwellings, as it appears that long after this period they were thatched with straw. From William the Lion, about the close of the 12th century, it is supposed the town received the privileges of a royal burgh, and the honour of being a place of mintage; but soon after, this monarch, as the price of his liberty, surrendered it to Henry II., King of England, by whom it was retained till 1186. In the year 1214 a parliament first assembled here, in the reign of Alexander II. In 1239 a general council of the Scottish church met here; and during the reign of Alexander III. it became the royal residence, and the despository of the records and regalia of the kingdom. In 1291 the town and castle were surrendered to King Edward I.; but were speedily regained by the Scots, who held them, until the fatal battle of Dunbar, in 1294, enabled Edward to recapture them. The castle continued in the possession of the English until 1312, when it once more reverted to Scotland. In 1326, the fourteenth parliament of Bruce met in Holyrood Abbey; and the next year was memorable for the admission of the borough representatives among those of the other estates, and for the confirmation of the treaty of Northampton, by which the independence of Scotland was acknowledged by Edward III. Shortly after, Robert I. granted a charter to the inhabitants of Edinburgh, and placed under their dominion the town of Leith, "with its harbour and mills." During the reign of Edward III. the castle twice changed hands, but it ultimately submitted to its natural masters, and the city continued to increase in importance, until it became the residence of the chief functionaries of the government, after the murder of James I. in 1436-7, after which it became the recognised metropolis of the kingdom. Edinburgh now rapidly increased in population; and as it was hemmed in by walls, houses of great height were erected, and very close together.

The character of the Old Town at the present day is derived from this time. At this period, also, a new street was formed, the Cowgate, parallel to the main street on the south, at the bottom of the ridge, now one of the poorest and most narrow streets in the Old Town. About the middle of the 15th century Edinburgh was encircled by walls, at the instigation of James II., the marriage of which monarch with Mary Gueldres, and her coronation, were celebrated with great pomp in the Abbey of Holyrood, which abbey became the tomb of the king eleven years afterwards. The turbulent reign of James III. succeeded, during which the sites of the markets were determined, the provost made sheriff of the town, and various municipal privileges granted to the inhabitants. In token of the bravery and loyalty of the inhabitants, a banner was also given to them, to be displayed "in defence of their king their country, and their own rights." This flag, from its colour, received the name of the "blue blanket," and remains in the custody of the convener of the trades, at whose appearance therewith, says tradition, not only the artificers of Edinburgh, but those of the whole kingdom, are to repair to it, and fight under the convener. On all great pageants, this memorial of the loyalty of Edinburgh is ostentatiously displayed. In 1508 the thickly-wooded lands of the "Borough Moor" were cleared of their trees, in virtue of powers granted by the king; and, in order to obtain purchasers for the timber, the magistrates enacted that "whoever bought as much as would be sufficient to make a new front to his house, might extend the same seven feet further into the street;" by which impolitic permission the town was filled with wooden houses, and the main street contracted fourteen feet in width.

The year 1513 was memorable for the double calamity of the plague and the disastrous defeat at Flodden. The latter misfortune filled Edinburgh with consternation; all capable of bearing arms were ordered to defend the walls, and "the women were discharged from crying or clamouring in the streets;" the Privy Council for safety adjourned to Stirling, where James V. was crowned. At this alarming crisis the fortifications were strengthened, and a new wall built, which encompassed the high grounds on the south, parts of which still remain. The plague continuing its virulence, the young king was removed to Dalkeith or Craigmillar. During his minority, the Earl of Arran and Cardinal Beatoun, jealous of the influence acquired by the Earl of Angus, through his marriage with the Queen Dowager, attacked him and his partizans in the street, near the Netherbow port, in which conflict more than two hundred and fifty men were slain, and the residue of the Hamilton's or Arran's party expelled by the Douglases, or a faction of Angus. This bloody affair was designated by the populace "Cleanse the Causeway." Similar sanguinary occurrences were not unfrequent in these contentious times, and during his whole minority the capital was the theatre of tumult, chiefly through the turbulence of the house of Douglas. In consequence of the prevailing disquietude, the Privy Council and Parliament frequently met in the Tolbooth, or common gaol. In 1514 the small force was appointed afterwards known by the name of the "City Guard," which was dissolved so lately as 1817. In 1528 excitements and disturbances arose in the city, from the secret diffusion of the principles of the Reformation.

The year 1532 was signalized by the establishment in the capital of the College of Justice, which important corporation, including the whole body of functionaries connected with the supreme courts, endowed Edinburgh still more with the attributes of a metropolis; and as the city rose in dignity, the Parliament interfered for the correction of its deformities. Rows of obstructing tenements were removed, and many salutary regulations enforced for the prevention of impurities; the High street was paved, and lanterns were ordered to be hung out at night by the inhabitants. In 1534, Norman Gourlay and David Straiton were tried and condemned at Holyrood for heresy, and executed at Greenside. In 1543, the magistrates having thought proper to deprive the craftsmen of the privilege of voting at the election of provosts and bailies, the deacons drew their swords in the council chamber; but the strife was subdued, partly by compromise and partly by the irresistible reasonings of an armed force. The next year was a disastrous one for the rising metropolis. Henry VIII. of England, in revenge for the opposition made by the Catholic regency of Arran and Beatoun to the marriage of his son Edward with the young Queen Mary, sent an army and fleet to ravage Scotland, under the command of the Earl of Hertford, who, landing at Leith, set fire to Edinburgh, and burnt the abbey and palace of Holyrood. The attempt to capture the castle was unsuccessful; but the departing foe destroyed the pier of Leith, seized the ships in the harbour, and "neither pyle, village, town, nor house, in their way homewards, was left unburnt." In consequence of this outrage, a French garrison was introduced four years afterwards, under D'Esse, who fortified Leith, and took every precaution against a repetition of the calamity.

About the year 1556, the intrepid reformer, John Knox, became conspicuous. The Reformation now made rapid progress in Scotland, but not without strife and bloodshed. The population destroyed not only the symbols of popery, but also many of the religious houses. On the anniversary of Saint Giles, the patron saint of Edinburgh, the priests and monks were furiously attacked and dispersed, and the effigy of the saint, which they were carrying in procession, was indignantly destroyed; and when the lords of the congregation arrived from Perth, Stirling, and Linlithgow, they found their purposed work had been anticipated by the people; but it is fortunate that the rage of the reformers in Edinburgh was confined to the decorations and furniture of the churches, so that two of the chief ecclesiastical edifices still remain, while the convents and monasteries were converted into dwelling houses, some of which are still standing. The struggle between the two parties now became fierce, and but for the arrival of an English force to the assistance of the Protestants, the issue of the contest would have been doubtful; but the reformers, with these auxiliaries, becoming ascendant, the triumph of the popular sentiment was complete. The first assembly of the reformed kirk met in Edinburgh on the 15th of January, 1560. On the 9th of August, 1561, Mary, Queen of Scots, landed at Leith, from France, to sway the sceptre of her ancestors, and she was well received; but her predilection for the Romish ritual soon abated her popularity, and subjected her to insult; even her private chapel was invaded and her devotions interrupted. The drama now became fearfully interesting, the scenes were rapidly shifted, and tragical incidents occurred in quick successi n. Darnley was proclaimed king at the market cross on the 28th of July, 1565, and on the next morning, within the chapel of Holyrood, he became the husband of Queen Mary. On the 9th of the following March, David Rizzio, the Italian favourite of the Qu en, was murdered, in the palace, by Darnley and his confederates. On the 19th of June the Queen gave birth to a son, afterwards James the Sixth of Scotland, and the First of England. On the 10th of the ensuing February, 1567, while Darnley sojourned in a secluded house, called the Kirk-o'-Field, near the site of the present University, it was blown up by gunpowder, and he lost his life. Many circumstances coincided to involve the Earl of Bothwell in suspicion of planning the murder, and the Queen of a guilty privity. Be this as it may, Bothwell, having divorced himself from his wife, became the husband of the queen in three short months after its perpetration. This shameless marriage took place on the 15th of May, 1567, in the palace of Holyrood, and was the occasion of fresh disturbances in Edinburgh. So formidable was the insurrection, that the Queen and Bothwell, on the 6th of June, fled from the popular odium, first to Borthwick Castle, and thence to Dunbar, which abandonment of the capital was followed by the entry of three thousand insurgents, who took possession of the seat of government. Shortly afterwards the queen was brought back to Edinburgh, a spectacle for the insults of the populace, and the next day was sent a prisoner to Lochleven Castle. A regency was then formed in the name of the infant son of Mary, James VI., and the Earl of Moray was proclaimed regent; but the assassination of this popular favourite, two years after, at Linlithgow, threw the capital into confusion. The struggle between the contending parties was renewed with alternate ascendancy; the Earl of Lennox became the new regent, and Kirkcaldy of Grange, the provost of the town and governor of the castle, declared for the queen, whose party held a parliament in the Tolbooth, while that of the regent held theirs in the Canongate. Kirkcaldy seized all the arms he could find, and planted a battery on the steeple of St. Giles, and being supplied by France with money and ammunition, he and his associates became formidable antagonists to the regency. The Earl of Morton and the regent, on the other side, having united, fortified Leith, and for two years the two parties waged a fluctuating warfare, until Queen Elizabeth of England, at the entreaty of Morton, sent a small army from Berwick, which soon reduced the castle, and the captive Kirkcaldy, with his brother, were shortly afterwards hanged at the Cross, although they had surrendered under a promise of merciful treatment. But the time had now arrived for the young king to assume the government himself. He entered the city with great pomp, and immediately convened a parliament in the Tolbooth, and tranquillity was in some degree restored. The Earl of Morton, the late regent, was now accused of being an accessory to the murder of Darnley, was convicted, and executed by a machine called the "maiden," similar to the guillotine, and alleged to be an invention of his own. The Reformation now being firmly established, education became an object of solicitude; the University of Edinburgh arose, and around it many subordinate colleges and schools, by which the character of the city was elevated. The poor, also, were not forgotten: funds for their maintenance were granted from the revenues of the suppressed religious houses and their lands. King James, though he had assumed the throne, held the sceptre with a feeble hand. The chief nobility, clergy, and a considerable portion of the community, were jealous of monarchy, and the uncompromising character of the new religion, with the austere manners of its professors, were little in unison with the manners and practices of the Court. They preferred presenting James with 5,000 merks, about £280 sterling, to provide an entertainment, and shortly after they were required to send a beautiful ship to Denmark, at the cost of £500, to bring home the king and his bride; they also presented the bride with a valuable jewel, pledged to them by the king as security for a considerable sum advanced him. Still these munificent donations did not exempt the citizens from "intolerable impositions and grievous exactions." The execution of Queen Mary, in 1586, excited great indignation in Edinburgh, but neither the king nor his subjects displayed their feelings by any deeds. In 1591, the Earl of Bothwell made a daring attempt to seize the person of the king. Having introduced himself at night into the court of the palace, he advanced to the royal apartment; but before he could force the doors the alarm was given, the citizens flew to arms, and frustrated the attempt. Bothwell escaped, but eight of his followers were executed. A fresh cause of tumult soon arose; the young Earl of Moray, the heir of the regent, was assassinated by the Earl of Huntly; and as the king was suspected of connivance, the citizens indignantly arose, and openly insulted both the king and his ministers. James thought it prudent to retreat to Glasgow, where he remained till the hurricane had subsided. Not long afterwards the monarch was presented by these same citizens with ten tuns of wine, and a hundred of their number were in attendance at the baptism of Prince Henry; a guard of fifty citizens was also appointed to protect his person from Bothwell. In 1598 a rebellion broke among the boys in the High School, and one of the bailies was shot by a youth while attempting to subdue it. James, annoyed by the freedom of the language that was uttered from the pulpits, attempted to restrain it, which excited an insurrection that not only occasioned his prerogative to be insulted, but his person to be endangered. He, in consequence, retired from the city, ordered all the public courts to be removed, and was only prevented from avenging himself still further by the supplications and cash of the magistrates. In 1596 James was again in collision with his subjects, in consequence of some English players being introduced into the city. Shakespeare is supposed to have been one of the number. The clergy fulminated their abhorrence, and the presbytery issued a decree against the players, which the privy council annulled, and the continuance of the players was tolerated, which was followed up, in June, 1598, by an ordinance that every Monday should be a play day. At this period an important alteration was made in the computation of time. The year had hitherto commenced on the 25th of March, but by a convention of estates, which met on the 10th of December, 1599, it was ordered that in future New Year's Day should be on the first of January.

The manners of the times are thus described by an Englishman who visited Edinburgh in the year 1598:—"Myself was at a knight's house, who had many servants to attend to him, that brought in his meat with their heads covered with blue caps, the table being covered with great platters of porridge, each having a little piece of sodden meat, and when the table was served the servants sat down with us; but the upper mess, instead of porridge, had a pullet with some prunes in the broth; and I observed no art of cookery or furniture of household stuff, but rather rude neglect of both, though myself and companions, sent from the governor of Berwick about bordering affairs, were entertained after the best manner. They drink pure wines, not mixed with sugar like the English; yet at feasts they put comfits in their wines, after the French fashion, but they have not our vintners' fraud to mix their wines. I did never see nor hear that they have any public inns with signs hanging out, but the better sort of citizens brew ale, their usual drink, which will distemper a stranger's body. Their bedsteads are like cupboards in the wall, with doors to be opened and shut at pleasure; so that we climbed up to our beds," &c. In 1600, the Duke of Rohan, having visited Edinburgh, states that the city was about one thousand paces in length, and from four to five hundred in breadth; and adds that there was nothing remarkable in it but the great street, which was very long and broad, and extended from one end of the town to the other; the houses, he says, were not sumptuous, being almost all built of wood.

On the 24th of March, 1603, Queen Elizabeth died, and James succeeded to the throne of England, to which country he immediately departed, after taking formal farewell of the citizens of Edinburgh, at the church of St. Giles, where he addressed them after the sermon, and both parties, it is said, evinced deep emotion. The superior splendour of the English throne caused James, perhaps, to think his Scottish one too plain and unostentatious; and, to change its character a little, he sent down to the magistrates of Edinburgh patterns for their gowns, which they were directed to wear, and, moreover, to have a sword of state carried before them; but instead of sending with these patterns 59,000 merks, which he owed, he obliged them to be content with 20,000, in full of all demands; notwithstanding which, when the king paid his long-promised visit to his Scottish capital, in 1618, he was received with pomp and addressed with adulation; the magistrates, upon the "verie knees of their barts," doing him reverence, and styling him the "perfection of eloquence and the quintessence of rulers." They entertained him with a banquet, and presented him with a silver basin with 10,000 merks (about £560 sterling) in it, in double gold angels. A parliament was immediately convened, and among other acts which it passed was one for the restitution of archbishops, bishops and chapters. About this time the town council purchased the mills of Bonnington from Robert and John Logan, with the lands and tiends belonging to them, for 1,230 merks Scots (£68 6s. 8d. sterling). In 1621 an act was passed for the covering of houses with lead, slate or tiles, instead of thatch, and water was introduced the same year by pipes; three new bells were imported from Holland—two for St. Giles's church and one for the Netherbow Port. March 27th, 1625, closed James's career; and on the 31st, Charles I. was proclaimed king in his stead; and in June, 1633, he was crowned king of Scotland in the Abbey of Holyrood.

The erection of Edinburgh into a bishopric, and an order for the introduction of a liturgy into the churches, caused great tumult in the city, resulting in a general assembly at Glasgow, in 1638, by which Presbyterianism was immediately restored. The treaties of Berwick and Ripon exhibit both the hatred of the Scotch to prelacy and the folly of the monarch in endeavouring to enforce it. Soon after the treaty of Ripon, Charles visited Edinburgh, but though he was ostentatiously received, his conduct during his residence was neither discreet nor grateful. The "great rebellion," as it is termed, broke out shortly after, during which the "solemn league and covenant" between the two nations for the extirpation of prelacy was signed in the High Church, Edinburgh, in July, 1643, and twelve hundred men were sent in consequence to assist the English parliamentary forces against Charles; but in 1645, the covenanters being routed by Montrose, at Kilsyth, Edinburgh was threatened with destruction by the marquis unless the prisoners of the king's party were instantly released, and the city at this moment being desolated by the plague, his demands were complied with. On the 18th of May, 1650, the Marquis of Montrose was brought a prisoner into Edinburgh, and three days after was hanged at the cross.

Averse to Republicanism, the Scots proclaimed the exiled Charles the Second as their king, which brought upon them the avenging sword of Cromwell; and in December, 1650, he was in possession of Edinburgh and its castle, but the magistrates had fled to Stirling, the headquarters of Charles, leaving the city to be governed by thirty chosen citizens. The battle of Worcester having placed Scotland completely in the power of Cromwell, commissioners were sent by him from England to rule the kingdom, who arrived at Dalkeith in January, 1652; and from them the humble citizens were obliged to obtain consent ere they could elect new magistrates. Under the sway of Cromwell, Edinburgh and Leith enjoyed repose; but so greatly were they impoverished by so many years of strife, that very few of the inhabitants were in a condition to pay their debts, and the magistrates were served with a charge of horning for £550,000 Scots, £43,833 6s. 8d. sterling, which, with difficulty, they obtained time to pay.

During the period of the Commonwealth there was a virtual union between England and Scotland, and much salutary reform was introduced in the municipal regulations. The restoration of Charles in 1660 was hailed with joy by the Town Council, who, in return for a donation of £1,000 made to his Majesty, received permission to levy a tax upon the citizens of one-third of a penny on each pint of ale, and twopence on each pint of wine consumed in the city; indeed, at this epoch, both loyalty and disaffection were made pretexts for amercing the citizens, in the one case by a tax, and in the other a fine. Adam Woodcock, at this period, was licensed by the Town Council to run a coach between Edinburgh and Leith, the fare to be fourpence each person; and the baron bailie of Broughton had a grant made to him of the goods and chattels of all women condemned for witchcraft. In August, 1660, the English tribunals gave place to the ancient forms of government, and the first parliament, in 1661, rescinded all acts passed during the last twenty-three years, and restored episcopacy. Severities towards the Presbyterians followed, and Scotland, in consequence, during the succeeding twenty seven years, was in a state of insurrection and anarchy; the lawn of the prelate was stained with the blood of the Presbyterian, and the slaughtered bodies of the covenanters were strewn thickly on the land, until at last the mantle of Knox proved more invincible than the mail of the cavalier. The covenanters of the west and south rose in arms. Dispirited by the desertion of more than one-half of their number, which never much exceeded five thousand, and fatigued by their long march, they reached the Pentland Hills on the 28th November, 1666, where they were overtaken by General Dalziel, with a body of cavalry. Though now reduced to eight hundred, they bravely repulsed several attacks of their assailants, but were at length overpowered and dispersed. About fifty were killed, and one hundred and fifty taken prisoners—twenty of these were executed at Edinburgh, thirty-five were hanged in the country before their own doors, and others were grievously tortured. The magistracy, by bribes and entertainments, entailed a debt upon the city which to this hour is a vexatious burden to its inhabitants. The Duke of Lauderdale appears to be a prime recipient of the corporation moneys. Some curious specimens of the trifling of the municipal functionaries occur at this period. Women were forbidden to wear plaids on their heads on pain of seizure. The charges made at "penny weddings" were solemnly moderated, and one James Michael Philo, physician, was authorized to erect a stage in Edinburgh, on which to practise his profession, but discharged from any performance of rope dancing until his claim had been examined by the "master of the revells." In 1678, it appears from a "list of the hail possessors (of houses) in the different parishes," taken under authority of the magistrates, that there were at this time within the royalty, 3,333 families, so that, taking five as the average number of each, the population amounted to 16,665.

In the year 1679, James, Duke of York, took up his abode in Holyrood House, and won the affections of the citizens by the gaiety of his court, and by his conformity to their predilections; balls and masquerades were got up by the ladies in his suite, and the novel beverage tea was introduced to their parties. To the popularity acquired by James in this visit, may be, in some degree ascribed that zeal for the Stuart cause which was manifested in 1715 and 1745. In January, 1685, an equestrian statue of Charles II. was ordered to be erected in Parliament close, now Parliament square; and on the 15th February following, the flagitious original was as cold and lifeless as the statue. A few days afterwards a stage was erected at the Cross, from which the Lyon King at Arms, attended by all the great functionaries, proclaimed King James, and swore unto him allegiance and fealty; the pulpits became rostrums for adulation; and Viscount Melfort, one of the secretaries of state, was presented by the obsequious Town Council with a jewel worth £500 sterling, for the many services he had rendered the city, and three days afterwards with £300 in cash, for delivering the city address to the king. A few months after the accession of James, the citizens beheld the unfortunate Earl of Argyll led ignominiously to the same gallows on which Montrose had suffered, he having attempted to raise the standard of rebellion in Scotland in concert with the Duke of Monmouth, and in support of his attempt in England. The Earl having been indebted to Heriot's Hospital to the amount of £58,403 10s. Scots, the corporation of Edinburgh was compelled to pay the money. The suspension of the test soon disclosed the intentions of the King. Early in 1686, every printer and bookseller in Edinburgh was forbidden by the privy council to print or sell any book animadverting on the Romish faith; but when the officer of the privy council waited upon James Glen with his prohibition, Glen said he had "one book in his shop which was all against popery, but which he would sell in spite of the mandate." "What book is it?" inquired the officer. "It is the Bible," answered Glen, "the worst enemy the Church of Rome ever fought against." Tumults now became very frequent. The chancellor's lady and other persons of distinction were insulted as they were returning from the celebration of mass. This led to an order from the privy council that one of the rioters, a journeyman baker, should be whipped through the Canongate; the populace rushed to the rescue of their martyr, beat the executioner, and continued tumultuous during the night; the king's foot guards and soldiers from the castle fired upon them, and a woman and two men were killed; next day several of the captive rioters were ordered to be whipped. The council, however, took care to have musketeers and pikemen in attendance in prevent the repetition of a rescue. A drummer was shot for having said he could find in his heart to run his sword through some papists; and a fencing master was hanged at the Cross merely for having drank "confusion to papists," and having likewise expressed his good will towards the rioters.

Such were the measures of the city magistracy, in defiance of the murmurs and disgust of the citizens; and shortly afterwards we find these servile minions assuring the king that they were "ready with their lives and fortunes to stand by his sacred person upon all occasions, and praying for the continuance of his princely goodness and care towards the city." This fawning was rewarded by the surrender to them of the impost upon ale, of which the corporation had for some time been robbed by the treasury. So zealous, indeed, were the magistrates in the papal cause, that one Watson, a popish printer, having been distrained upon for rent, the articles seized were forcibly taken from the officer, and these with their owner, were conveyed to the sanctuary of Holyrood. Watson was afterwards made king's printer, which appointment was continued to his son in the reign of Queen Anne. From the records of Fountain-hall, we find that, on the 23rd November, 1686, the king's yacht arrived at Leith, with the altar, vestments, images, priests, and their appurtenances, for the popish chapel in the abbey of Holyrood. On St. Andrew's day the chapel was consecrated by holy water, and a sermon by Wederington. On the 8th of February, 1688, Ogston, a bookseller, was threatened for selling Archbishop Usher's sermon against the papists and the history of the French persecutions, and all the copies were taken from him. On the 22nd March the rules of the popish college in the abbey of Holyrood were published, inviting children to be educated gratis. But the landing of the Prince of Orange in England changed the scene. The Presbyterians now poured into Edinburgh, and the papists rushed out. All was uproar; the Earl of Perth, the chancellor, fled from the city, and the government fell into the hands of the revolutionists. The populace assembled at the beat of drum in multitudes; the abbey was attacked, the assailants were fired upon, and a dozen were killed, and thrice as many wounded. This caused their retreat, but they quickly reappeared, headed by the magistrates, town-guard, train band, and heralds; another skirmish ensued, in which the revolutionists were successful; the abbey church and chapel were ransacked, the college of the Jesuits destroyed, and the houses of the Roman Catholics plundered; in short, every symbol of the hated religion existing in the city was extirpated with a fierceness approaching to frenzy—even the wynds and closes were explored, and many religious houses therein were entered and sacked; the only class that remained true to the popish cause were the clergy, and they were the chief sufferers by the change. The privy council and magistrates veered with the shifting wind; these men who so lately were ready with their lives and fortunes to stand by King James, with a baseness unmatched, were the first in "offering their services to the Prince of Orange," and the loudest in their complaints of the "hellish attempts of Romish incendiaries."

On the 14th of March, 1689, assembled the convention of estates—the most momentous meeting that Edinburgh ever witnessed. It resolved, that James having forfeited the crown, it should be offered to William and Mary; a second result of their deliberations was the memorable "claim of rights;" a new election of municipal officers was advised, by poll of the burgesses paying, watching, and warding, and liable for other public claims; several ministers were deprived of their pulpits for refusing to pray for the new Sovereigns; the convention became a parliament, and the established religion was declared Presbyterian. The predicament of Edinburgh at this moment was singularly critical: on the one hand was the convention surrounded by the masses of its supporters, armed and unarmed, including six thousand Cameronians from the West; on the other was the castle in the hands of the Duke of Gordon, the partisan of James, and who could, if he willed it, make the city a ruin; numerous violent royalists also paraded the streets, with Lord Balcarres and the reckless Dundee at their head—the latter, indeed, with a party of fifty horse, waiting the signal for mischief. Yet no explosion took place; Dundee quitted the city for Perthshire, first clambering up the western side of the castle to commune with the governor. The death of this daring foe on the 17th of July, 1689, and the surrender of the castle on the 13th of June, 1690, secured the permanency of the salutary changes.

During the reign of King William, Edinburgh reposed in comparative peace; but the new civic government became jealous of the college of justice, whose members it disarmed; the gaol was filled with the disaffected, amongst whom were Lords Balcarres and Kilsyth, and the atrocious Earl of Perth. Many of the acts of the new authorities were arbitrary and severe. Towards the close of William's reign, six ships sailed from the Firth of Forth, amid the acclamations of multitudes, to plant a colony on the Isthmus of Darien; and when the failure of this scheme became known in March, 1699, the rage of the people was ungovernable, as the miscarriage of the enterprise was attributed to the influence of the king; the prisons were broken open and many acts of violence perpetrated before the popular effervescence subsided. On Saturday, the 3rd of February, 1700, a dreadful conflagration broke out on the south side of Parliament square, which destroyed an extensive pile of buildings, including the Advocates' Library and the Bank of Scotland, and dislodging nearly two hundred families from their dwellings.

The reign of Queen Anne was signalized by the event so momentous to Scotland, the "Act of Union." Alarming were the disturbances which manifested the unpopularity of the measure, and the period between January 11th, 1705, and January 16th, 1707, during which it was discussed, was one of clamour and outrage. The parliament and commissioners were compelled to seek the protection of the military during the ratification of the articles. Many of the prognostications of the adversaries of the union were realized; the capital was soon deserted by the higher classes of its residents, and their expenditure, in consequence, transferred to the rival metropolis. Among other causes of regret was the discontinuance of the popular city pageant called the "riding of parliament," a grand and gorgeous procession, which took place at the opening of the session of parliament. From the 1st May, 1707, when the Act of Union came into operation, the aspect of the Scottish capital became strikingly changed, improvement ceased, and for nearly half a century little activity or energy was displayed. In 1715, two attempts were made by the Jacobite party to get possession of the city, both of which failed. The remarkable tumult, known as the Porteous mob, happened in 1736. Its particulars, including the attempted rescue of Wilson, the smuggler; the firing on the mob by Porteous, the commander of the civic militia; his trial, conviction, reprieve, and subsequent execution by the hands of the riotors; the arrest of the lord provost for his want of precaution, and the fine of £2,000 imposed upon the city as a compensation to the widow of Porteous—are all fully detailed in Sir Walter Scott's "Heart of Midlothian;" and it is not the least extraordinary circumstance connected with this singular affair, that none of the actors in the tragedy were ever discovered, although a large reward was offered. The next agitating event was the surrender of the city to Prince Charles Edward in the rebellion of 1745, followed by the proclamation, at the Cross, of James VIII, as king of Scotland. The battle of Prestonpans quickly succeeded, terminating in favour of the Pretender, after a conflict of only ten minutes' duration; it was at this battle that the good Colonel Gardiner fell. After an impolitic continuance in the city for six weeks, the Chevalier departed with 6,000 troops, which, after marching and wandering for six months, agitated alternately by hope and apprehension, met their final overthrow on the plains of Culloden, April 16th, 1746. Between this period and 1779, few events occurred important enough for our brief chronicle. In 1778, the mutiny of Lord Seaforth's Highland regiment on account of their being ordered to India without payment of some arrears, and a stipulation as to the limit of their service, occasioned a considerable sensation. The mutineers ascended the lofty eminence of Arthur's Seat, where they remained encamped until an adjustment was effected by Lords Dunmore and Macdonald. The French revolution caused in Scotland, as well as in the sister kingdom, diversity of opinion and much excitement of feeling. Those who hailed the emancipation of a great people from vassalage formed associations for the nurture of the principles of freedom and the diffusion of political knowledge; these were watched with jealousy by the British government, and a system of espionage was established, the treacherous agents of which incited their victims to enthusiastic imprudence, and then betrayed them to their employers. Among those so denounced were Messrs. Watt, Downie, Muir, Margarot, and Gerald; the first was convicted and hanged; the others were transported; Watt had formerly been a government spy. The trials of these gentlemen and the severity of their sentences shed no lustre upon Scottish jurisprudence; the judges were too plainly animated by political feeling.

During the long war which ensued on the French revolution, and when the country was in dread of invasion, volunteer companies were formed in Edinburgh. Nowhere, perhaps, was the enthusiasm which led to their formation more genuine or more widely diffused among all classes of the people. In the latter part of 1811 the lawless part of the population concocted a plan for the indiscriminate plunder of the citizens, and on the last night of the year a numerous gang of juvenile desperadoes sallied forth with bludgeons, and knocked down everyone whose appearance gave them the chance of booty. Resistance was ineffectual, for the police were routed, and High-street and North Bridge-street were for hours in the possession of the plunderers. Many persons were dangerously wounded, and several mortally. Three of the delinquents were executed in High-street, after conviction of murder. On the 15th August, 1822, George IV. disembarked at the landing-place of Leith, the first visit of the sovereign to Scotland since the time of Charles II. Our limits will not permit a detail of the movements of royalty, nor of the pompous preparations which were made for the reception of the king. From all parts of Scotland multitudes thronged to Edinburgh. Loyalty was enthusiastic and very demonstrative. The feeling was national, and all classes shared in it. The king's entrance into Edinburgh was a triumphal procession. He took up his abode at Dalkeith House, as the guest of the Duke of Buccleuch; held a levee at Holyrood, and attended public worship on Sunday in the High Church. On the 26th the king was present at the ball of the Caledonian Hunt, and next evening he saw "Rob Roy" performed at the theatre. A splendid banquet was prepared for his Majesty in the great hall of the parliament house by the lord provost, magistrates, and town council. The lord provost received a baronetcy. On the 29th, after partaking of a repast at Hopetoun House, the king embarked on board the royal yacht at Port Edgar, near Queensferry, amid the acclamations of assembled thousands; and thus closed a spectacle which will long live in recollection. We pass over a period of twenty years, and arrive at a similar occasion of excitement in the Scottish metropolis.

On Monday, the 29th of August, 1842, her Majesty Queen Victoria, with her royal consort, Prince Albert, and suite, embarked at Woolwich, to visit the Scottish capital; on Thursday morning the approach of the royal squadron was announced by the firing of two guns from the castle; at eight o'clock it arrived at Granton Pier, and in little more than an hour after the royal party landed on the platform erected for the occasion. Her Majesty was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and the arrangements on this occasion in Edinburgh were upon a scale unequalled in the annals of Scotland. On Tuesday morning, the 6th of September, Her Majesty took her departure for the north, and she and her royal consort were received with every expression of joy and loyalty wherever they went. On Monday, the 14th of September, the Queen again passed through Edinburgh on her way to Dalkeith, to embark at Granton. Since that time Her Majesty has frequently visited Edinburgh, sometimes spending a night at Holyrood, in going to or returning from Balmoral; but although public feeling has always been ready to display itself warmly, no particular preparations have been made upon any occasion, except in the month of August, 1876, when her Majesty again visited Edinburgh, and upon that occasion unveiled the memorial to the late Prince Consort, a description of which will be found in a subsequent column.

INTERESTING RELICS OF ANTIQUITY.

EDINBURGH CASTLE is situated on the western and rugged extremity of the central hill on which the ancient part of the city is built. It is of great antiquity; the rock is supposed to have been first fortified about the year 617 by Edwin, son of Ælia, king of Northumbria. The area of the rock on which the castle stands measures about seven statute acres; the highest point is 437 feet above the level of the sea, and it is accessible only on the eastern side, the others being nearly perpendicular. Within are several batteries, magazines, storerooms and arsenals for upwards of thirty thousand stand of arms, barracks containing lodging for two thousand men with their officers, and every other requisite for the mustering and accommodation of a numerous garrison. In 1093, Malcolm III. (Malcolm Canmore) having fallen in battle at Alnwick, the castle of Edinburgh was besieged by Donald Bane, his brother, who aspired to the crown, to which the old Scottish customs gave him a right to pretend, although Malcolm had left children. The castle fell into the hands of the besiegers, the garrison escaping by a postern, under shelter of a thick fog, and carrying with them to Dunfermline the body of Margaret, Malcolm's queen, known as St. Margaret, the sister of Edgar Atheling, whom the Saxons of England sought to elevate to the throne after the battle of Hastings. William the Lion occasionally resided in the castle of Edinburgh, and in 1174 it was delivered up to the English, pledged for his ransom when taken prisoner at the battle of Alnwick, but shortly after restored on his marriage with the sister of Viscount Beaumont. In 1239, the daughter of Henry III. of England marrying Alexander III, had this castle assigned for her residence. During the contest between Bruce and Baliol, in 1296, the castle was besieged and taken by the English. It was several times taken and retaken during the struggle which then began, and which was decided in favour of the independence of Scotland by the battle of Bannockburn.

In 1297 it was dismantled by Sir William Wallace; having been repaired, it again fell into the hands of the English, when Robert Bruce caused it, with the other recovered fortresses, to be demolished. It was in ruins in 1336, when it served for a retreat to Count Namur's forces, defeated by the Earl of Moray. It remained in ruins till 1337, when Edward III. of England gave orders for it being rebuilt, and placed a strong garrison in it. In 1341 it was surprised by William Douglas. In 1371 David II. died in it. During the reign of Robert III. the burgesses of Edinburgh had the singular privilege conferred upon them of erecting dwellings within the castle, subject to no other limitation than that they should be persons of good fame. In 1400 the castle was taken by Henry IV. of England. It was seized by the Earl of Douglas in 1416, and held by him till 1418. The condition of Scotland at this time, when James I. was a prisoner in England, was one of nearly complete anarchy. After the murder of James I., at Perth, 1436, his queen and the royal family took refuge in the castle. James II., in the year 1438, was detained here by Sir William Crichton, the chancellor, in a sort of honourable durance, till, by a stratagem of the queen mother, he was conveyed, with his own consent, out of the castle in a wardrobe chest. Here, too, William, sixth earl of Douglas, and his brother David, were, in 1440, basely murdered by Crichton, who envied the earl's riches and dreaded his power. James III. was also confined in this castle by his subjects for nine months, till he was released in the year 1482, by the Duke of Albany, who, assisted by the citizens of Edinburgh, surprised the castle. It was converted into a state prison for James V. and his brother, while infants. In 1573 this fortress was held for the unfortunate Queen Mary, at that time a prisoner in Fotheringay Castle, by the faithful and heroic Kirkcaldy of Grange, who resolutely defended it for thirty-three days against the united efforts of the Scotch and English. When the fortifications were battered down, the blockhouse on the east taken by assault, every supply of water exhausted, and the garrison in mutiny, he made an honourable capitulation—not to the regent Morton, but to Sir William Drury, commander of the English forces; but Queen Elizabeth, regardless alike of her general's honour and her own, gave the prisoners up to the regent's disposal. In 1650 the castle sustained a siege of above two months against the parliamentary army, commanded by Cromwell, and at last yielded on honourable terms, Cromwell remarking that "if it had not come as it did, it would have cost very much blood."

After the flight of James II., at the close of 1688, it was long held for him by the Duke of Gordon, with a weak and ill-provided garrison. During this time, the Viscount Dundee, better known in Scottish history and tradition as Graham of Claverhouse, clambered up the precipice to hold a conference with Gordon, before he raised an army in the highlands on behalf of James.

In 1715, an unsuccessful attempt was made by the rebels to surprise this fortress; and in 1745, although the Highlanders were masters of the town, they did not venture to attack this post. During the war in the beginning of the present century a number of French prisoners were confined in the castle; but there have been no further memorable events in its history. In a small room on the ground floor of the castle, Mary Queen of Scots gave birth on the 19th of June, 1556, to her only son, James VI. of Scotland, afterwards James I. of England, in whom were united the crowns of the two kingdoms. The oak panels have been renewed after their original form, and copies of original portraits of Queen Mary and her son placed in it.

In the castle is to be seen a curious piece of ancient ordnance, called "Mons Meg," made of longitudinal bars of hammered iron, girt with iron hoops. It is thirteen feet in length, and twenty inches in calibre. Stone balls were fired from it, and some of them lie beside it. It is supposed to have been made at Mons, in the fifteenth century. It burst in 1682, on being fired in honour of the Duke of York's visit to Scotland. It was carried to London in 1754, and brought back in 1829.

The view from the castle is very extensive and splendid. On the highest point of the rock is a small chapel in the Norman style of architecture, said to have been built in the first half of the twelfth century, in the reign of David I. On the esplanade of the castle is a monument, in the form of a Runic cross, erected to the memory of the officers and soldiers of the 78th Highlanders who fell in India in 1857-8, while aiding to quell the Indian mutiny.

For a long period it was the general belief of the people of Scotland that the regalia (placed in the castle in the year 1707) had been surreptitiously removed to London; but by virtue of a royal mandate, a search was made in 1818, when a large oaken chest was found, in what is now called the "crown room," firmly secured with locks; these having been forced, the regalia, consisting of the crown, sceptre, and sword of state, were discovered carefully wrapped in fine linen cloth. They are of elegant workmanship, and in perfect preservation. The crown is of pure gold, highly ornamented with precious stones; the sceptre is of silver, double gilt, with a stem two feet long, of hexagonal form, divided by three buttons or knobs; it is surmounted with a crystal globe, two inches and a quarter in diameter; its whole length is thirty-four inches. The sword of state is five feet long, and of exquisite workmanship; the pommel and hilt are silver gilt, and fifteen inches in length; the traverse is seventeen inches and a half. The scabbard is of crimson velvet, and richly ornamented. This sword was presented by Pope Julius II. to James IV. The lord treasurer's rod of office is of silver gilt, and of beautiful execution These relics, together with a ruby ring set with diamonds, worn by Charles I. at his Scottish coronation; the golden collar of the Order of the Garter, sent by Elizabeth to James VI.; and the badge of the Order of the Thistle, set with diamonds, bequeathed by Cardinal York to George IV., are exhibited three hours every day. Tickets of admission are to be obtained gratuitously at the City Chambers.

THE PALACE OF HOLYROOD HOUSE stands at the eastern extremity of the city, at the bottom of the Canongate. It is a beautiful building, of a quadrangular form, with an open court, which is 94 feet square. The more ancient parts of this fine edifice, consisting of the north-west towers, were rebuilt by James V. about the year 1528; though Holyrood seems to have been an occasional royal residence for ages before. During the minority of Queen Mary, the palace of Holyrood was burnt, as well as the city, by the English forces under the Earl of Hertford; soon after it was repaired and enlarged beyond its present size,

At that time it is said to have consisted of no fewer than five courts, the most westerly of which was the largest. Great part of the palace of Holyrood House was burnt by the soldiers of Cromwell; but at the Restoration it was again repaired and altered to its present form by Charles II., from designs by Sir William Bruce. Prince Charles Stuart took up his residence for some time in this mansion of his forefathers in 1745; and hither the inhabitants of Edinburgh repaired to pay the contribution levied on the city, It was afterwards occupied by the Duke of Cumberland. In 1793 apartments were fitted up for the residence of the Comte d'Artois, the Duc d'Angouleme and Berri, and others of the French royal family. In 1831 the Comte d'Artois, Charles X. of France, returned to his old apartments, after an absence of thirty years, with several of his family, but soon quitted them and went to Germany. Previously to the visit of George IV. to Scotland, apartments in the palace were fitted up for his use; and though he resided at Dalkeith, a levee, drawing-room, and meetings of privy council were held here. The palace is now fitted up as a residence for her present Majesty, who occasionally spends a short time here on her visits to Scotland. The apartments of Mary Queen of Scots are shown to visitors. In them are many articles said to have been used by Queen Mary, and pieces of work said to have been wrought by her, but their history is very doubtful. Dark stains on the floor of one of the rooms are said to have been made by the blood of Rizzio, and to mark the spot where he was murdered on 9th March, 1566. A suit of armour and the boots and gloves which Darnley is said to have worn at the slaughter of Rizzio are placed in the apartment in which the deed was done. Along the north side of Holyrood Palace extends the picture gallery, a long apartment with a rather low roof, on the walls of which are hung pictures pretending to be portraits of the kings of Scotland, from Fergus I. downwards. They are worthless as works of art, and equally so as portraits, having been all painted in 1684-86 by James de Witt, a Dutch painter, who received £240 for the whole job. In the picture gallery the peers of Scotland meet to elect their representatives for the House of Lords, and her Majesty's Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland holds his levees and receptions. Adjacent to the palace stand the ruins of the church which belonged to the abbey of Holyrood House. In 1128, David I. founded this abbey by a charter, the original of which is in the archives of the city; it was bestowed on the canons regular of St. Augustine, who had also granted to them the church of Edinburgh Castle, with those of St. Cuthbert, Corstorphine, and Liberton, in the county of Midlothian; and of Airth, in Stirlingshire; the priories of St. Mary's Isle, in Galloway; of Blantyre, in Clydesdale; of Rowadill, in Ross; and three others in the Western Islands. They had also portions of lands assigned to them in different parts, with a most extensive jurisdiction: and so many other grants and privileges were bestowed on this abbey, that it was deemed the richest foundation in Scotland. In 1177 a national council was held in this abbey, on the arrival of a papal legate, to take cognisance of a dispute between the English and Scottish clergy, as to the submission of the latter to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the English prelate. The part now remaining was the nave of the original church, which, when entire, consisted of a centre and two aisles. It was burned by the English in 1385, and again in 1544 and 1547. In the south-east corner of the chapel is the royal vault, in which were deposited the remains of David II., James II., Prince Arthur, third son of James IV., James V. and his consort, Magdalen, with their second son, Arthur, Duke of Albany, and Henry, Lord Darnley. This repository of the royal dead did not escape the fury of the Revolution, when the populace plundered and burned it, their anger having been excited by its use for Roman Catholic worship in the time of James VII. Part of the leaden coffins were then carried away, and the remainder at the clearing out of the rubbish, after the roof fell from the weight of the heavy flags with which it was covered, in 1768. The great eastern window, erected about 1570, was blown down by a storm, in 1795, but restored about twenty years after, from its own fragments. The precincts of the abbey of Holyrood House, including the Queen's Park, were a sanctuary for insolvent debtors. A very handsome fountain was erected in 1859, opposite to the front of the royal palace. This fountain is a copy of an old and very beautiful one still standing in the courtyard of the ancient palace of Linlithgow.

THE MINT OF SCOTLAND.—In the lane called Gray's close, stand the buildings formerly occupied by the Mint of Scotland. They were erected in 1574, but no money has been coined there since the union of the two kingdoms. The first coin seems to have been struck in Scotland in the time of Alexander I., who commenced his reign in 1107. These coins were thin pieces of silver called pennies, and this was the silver coin in use until the reign of Queen Mary, who introduced reals, or royals, afterwards called crowns. The oldest gold coin bears the name of Robert, but whether of Robert I. is not fully ascertained. James V., in his bonnet pieces, contracted the surface and increased the thickness of the coinage. The general names for gold coins in Scotland were florins or nobles, and lions. When copper was first coined in Scotland is uncertain; James III., however, in 1466, procured an act from his first parliament for coining copper money, four to the penny. Pennies, worth one-twelfth of an English penny, were coined by James VI., and twopenny pieces, or bawbees, after the Restoration. To the prince formerly belonged the exclusive right of coining money and all mines of gold and silver; but coinage was not confined to the capital, and many coins bear the name of Aberdeen, Perth, Stirling, Dundee, Linlithgow, and Dumbarton. The principal instrument used in coining before the Restoration (when the mill and screw were introduced) were a hammer and steel dies. It is conjectured that the total sum of money in circulation at the Union amounted to upwards of £900,000 sterling.

THE PARLIAMENT HOUSE, where the Scottish Parliament met before the Union, occupies the south and west sides of Parliament quare, formerly known as Parliamen close, on the south side of High street, behind St. Giles's Cathedral. The present front of the building is of recent date, in the Italian style; the front was originally in the renaissance style. The hall formerly used for meetings of parliament is one hundred and twenty-two feet in length and forty in breadth; the ceiling is of massive carved oak, and the floor is also of oak, arranged in panels. This apartment now forms a handsome promenade, where gentlemen of the legal profession meet daily during session to transact business and attend their cases pending before the supreme courts, to the meetings of which the Parliament House has been appropriated since the time of the Union. The subject of the stained glass window on the south side of the hall is the inauguration of the Court, in 1537, by James V., who is in the act of presenting the deed of confirmation, by Pope Clement VII., to the Lord President. The other figures represent Dunbar, Archbishop of Glasgow, the Abbot of Cambuskenneth, and judges and nobles of the time. The window was erected at Munich, in 1868, from a design by Kaulbach, and cost £2,000. The hall is ornamented with statues and portraits of distinguished lawyers, more or less connected with Scotland. Of the statues, the principal are those of Lord President Forbes, in his judicial robes; Viscount Melville, Dundas of Arniston, Blair of Avonton, Francis Jeffrey, Boyle, and Cockburn. Among the portraits are—Lord Brougham, by Sir Daniel Macnee; Lords President M'Neill and Hope; John, Duke of Argyll; Lord President Lockhart, of Carnwath; and other distinguished legal functionaries. Within this hall was held the great banquet given by the corporation of the city to George IV., on his visit to Scotland in 1822. The Outer House, where the Lords Ordinary sit, is reached from below the window mentioned above, and consists of four small courts, where civil cases are tried for the first time. The Inner House is divided into two divisions (first and second), where appeals are heard from the Outer House and Sheriff Courts. The High Court of Justiciary is the supreme criminal tribunal of Scotland, and is situated in another part of the building. There are also entrances from the hall leading to the Advocates' Library, the Writers' to the Signet Library, and the library of the Solicitors before the supreme courts This noble hall, with the justiciary, exchequer, and jury courts, and the office of the police commissioners, occupies the whole of Parliament square, except the north side, where Saint Giles's Cathedral stands. In the centre of the square is an equestrian statue of Charles II.; the figure, which is in Roman costume, was raised in 1685, at an outlay of, it is stated, £215.

JOHN KNOX'S HOUSE.—This venerable building, once the habitation of the reformer Knox, is a conspicuous object in passing from High street towards the Canongate, as it projects at the terminating corner of the former, narrowing the street several feet at the point called Netherbow. On its angle there is a small bust, often said to represent Knox, but really intended to represent Moses, his right hand pointing to a stone above, on which is the name of God in Greek, Latin and English, the left hand resting on a tablet, supposed to represent the tables of the law. In consequence of the dilapidated state of the building, and its inconvenient projection into the street, its removal was, some time since, contemplated; a subscription, however, was raised to avert an act which would have been greatly deplored by many. The building was repaired in 1850, and it has since become, by legacy, the property of the Free Church of Scotland.

MORAY HOUSE, on the south side of Canongate, was erected in 1618 by Mary, Countess of Home, eldest daughter of Lord Dudley, and remained in the Earl of Moray's family until 1835. It was the residence of Oliver Cromwell whilst he was in Edinburgh in 1648. At the time of the Union it was occupied by the Earl of Seafield, the Chancellor of Scotland, and many meetings for deliberation on the question of the Union were held in it. A popular legend represents the Treaty of Union as having been signed in a summer-house in the garden, of which a drawing is given in some editions of Sir Walter Scott's "Tales of a Grandfather." The house is now occupied as a normal school in connection with the Free Church.

GRASSMARKET, &c.—In the centre of the wide street called the Grassmarket, the paving stones are arranged in the form of a small S. Andrew's cross, to mark the spot on which stood the fatal "gallows-tree," until 1785; and from this spot the spirit of many a martyr to the cause of Presbytery has winged its way to glory, during the persecuting period when Charles II. and James II. attempted to enforce prelacy upon the people of Scotland. Here it was that Porteus, the captain of the city guard, was hanged by the mob in 1736. To the west of Candlemaker row is the cemetery of Greyfriars' Church, where, among many other eminent persons, George Buchanan, Sir George Mackenzie, Alexander Henderson (the leader of the Scottish Presbyterians in 1638 and following years), Colin Maclaurin, Allan Ramsay, Adam, the architect, Robertson, the historian, and Blair, whose sermons were once so popular, and many others well known to fame, were interred. In this churchyard many covenanters, chiefly from the west of Scotland, were kept prisoners for some time in 1679, with no lodging but the bare ground and no shelter from the weather Some were set free, others were banished as slaves to the plantations.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CITY AND ITS INSTITUTIONS, MONUMENTS, &c.

The city of Edinburgh consists of two parts, called the Old Town and the New, singularly contrasted in their aspects; the Old Town covers the elevated ridge, sloping from the summit of the castle, on the west, to the base of a group of hills, at the eastern extremity, named Arthur's Seat, Salisbury Crags, and the Calton Hill. The aspect of the Old Town is singularly picturesque, from the great height of the buildings which crown the steep ridge. The New town is built on the more level ground, which chiefly forms a gentle and extensive declivity towards the north, a continuous street uniting it with Leith on the north-east. These two divisions are separated by a deep hollow, part of which was formerly occupied by a bog or lake called the North Loch, now drained. Through the midst of the Princes street gardens passes one of the principal lines of railway, connecting Edinburgh with the west and north of Scotland. The North Bridge and the Mound cross the hollow, and connect the Old Town with the New. To the spectator, viewing the city from an eminence, the situation appears strikingly adapted to give display to architectural beauty. For several centuries prior to the year 1763, Edinburgh had made little effort to enlarge its boundaries; but since that epoch in its history, its extension has been very rapid. Provost Drummond had the honour, on the 21st of October, 1763, of laying the first stone of the North Bridge, the completion of which formed a ready connection with the site which the New Town now occupies; the North Loch having been previously drained. In 1767 an act was passed for extending the royalty over the fields to the north; the New Town was immediately commenced, and the buildings proceeded with so much rapidity, that in 1771 St. Andrew's square, and the streets which open upon it, were nearly finished; since which, streets, squares, places, terraces, crescents circuses, and public edifices have arisen in rapid succession, wholly built of stone—an assemblage which, for regularity and beauty, will bear comparison with the most magnificent cities of Europe The New Town of Edinburgh now consists of three parts. The first of these divisions, which stands upon the low ridge of the Old Town, is laid out in the form of a parallelogram. The principal longitudinal streets are three—Princes street, George street, and Queen street; and these are intersected by others at right angles.

Princes street extends nearly in a straight line from east to west for about a mile. It partakes of the character of a terrace, facing the Old Town, from which it is separated by a wide valley laid out as public gardens. These are divided into two sections by the Mound, opposite Hanover street, on which are built the Royal Institution and the National Gallery.

George street, one hundred and fifteen feet broad, is distinguished by the grandeur of its appearance and the elegance of its architecture. On the east it is terminated by a beautiful square, called St. Andrew square; on the west by another very fine square named Charlotte square.

Queen street, which forms the north side of the original parallelogram of the New Town, consists, like Princes street, of a single row of houses, which look northwards, and command from their upper windows a magnificent view of the Firth of Forth and opposite coast and hills of Fife. In front of Queen street are Queen street gardens, northward of which is the second part of the New Town, beginning with Abercrombie place and Heriot row, which look towards the gardens. A central street of this part of the New Town is called Great King street, and is terminated, like George street, by large open areas; one of these is named Drummond place, the other the Royal circus. A third section of the New Town occupies the site formerly the park of the Earl of Moray, between Charlotte square and the Water of Leith, comprising Moray place, Ainslie place, Randolph crescent, and many superb streets. A noble bridge of four arches, called Dean bridge, crosses the Water of Leith on the north-west of this part of the New Town, the height of the bridge being 105 feet above the bed of the stream, which here flows through a deep dell or ravine. New streets and crescents have recently sprung up in the district to which this bridge gives access.

The third or eastern part of the New Town comprehends Leith Walk, the road connecting Leith with Edinburgh, and the buildings on the slopes of the Calton Hill including the magnificent terraces called Regent terrace, Carlton terrace, and Royal terrace. Above these terraces, on the slope of the hill, are extensive gardens, whilst the summit of the Calton Hill is crowned with monuments, and its northern slope are open to the public. In a line with Princes street is a grand approach to the city from the east by the Regent's bridge, which passes over the unsightly district called the Low Calton. The act of parliament authorising the erection of this bridge and the formation of the road, the greatest and most useful of the architectural improvements of Edinburgh, was passed in 1814; the bridge was finished in March, 1819. The arch over the Low Calton is fifty feet wide, forty-five feet in height on the north side, and fifty-four on the south; the roadway is formed of reversed arches, which support the rocky materials of which it is composed; the bridge is ornamented at its centre by Corinthian pillars and open arches, surmounted by entablatures, in the line of the adjoining buildings, called Waterloo place.

The Old Town of Edinburgh extends over a comparatively small area to the northward and southward of the central ridge occupied by the High street. The High street itself is prolonged up the acclivity westward, under the names of Lawnmarket and Castle hill, to the gate of the castle; eastward it assumes the name of Canongate, and terminates at Holyrood Palace. Canongate was formerly a separate burgh, but it is now municipally, as well as for parliamentary representation, incorporated with Edinburgh. Many of the nobles of Scotland once had residences in the Canongate, but it is now chiefly inhabited by the poorer classes. Here also are numerous public works. The old burgh of Portsburgh to the south-west of the Old Town is now also incorporated with the extended city.

The Old Town as well as the New Town is entirely built of stone; but the grand and venerable appearance which it presents on a general view, or in its principal streets, is exchanged for an aspect of squalor and misery in many of its narrow closes or alleys, particularly those which descend in parallel lines from the High street and Canongate on both sides where the population is still extremely dense; and the great height and crowding of the buildings, in which many families dwell under one roof, prevents the free entrance of light and air. The comprehensive scheme of improvement, calculated in 1867 to have cost the citizens about £300,000, which was proposed and matured by the late Lord Provost, Dr. William Chambers, of Glenormiston, has been completed. The operations consisted in opening up new and wide streets, widening some of the closes, and leaving open spaces where were many of the old houses unfit for human habitation. Several of the formerly crowded and squalid districts have been cleared out, new streets formed, and new houses erected, greatly to the sanitary and moral improvement of the localities. Up to the year 1887 about £558,000 had been expended in acquiring and removing old buildings, and interest on capital and other expenses, and there had been derived from the sale of sites in the new streets £148,000, from the improvement rate £381,000, and from other sources £30,000. Besides carrying out these beneficial improvements the Town Council has in many other ways done much in recent years to promote the public health and the amenity of the city. It may be noted that the Town Council have founded public baths at a capital expenditure of about £15,000; and that by the munificence of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of New York (who gave £50,000 for the purpose), buildings are in course of erection for a Public Library, for the maintenance of which provision is made out of the borough rates.

The Cowgate is a narrow street of the Old Town, to the south of the High street, and nearly parallel to it, at the bottom of the ridge. The closes are more filthy and wretched than even those of the High street. Of the streets leading southwards from the High street, the two principal ones are carried over the Cowgate by bridges. South Bridge street is the chief outlet from the city to the south. Its prolongation receives the name of Nicolson street, Clerk street, &c., and terminates in the road to Penicuik and Peebles. It is a street of good houses and shops, and in it are the University, Surgeons' Hall, and other fine buildings.

About the time (towards the close of the last century) that Edinburgh began to extend to the north, and the New Town to be built, an extension to the south took place, which, however, was soon arrested, and of which the chief evidence is to be found in George square, closely adjacent to the densely-populated parts of the Old Town, but still the residence of some of the higher classes. For many years the town has been extending in every direction to the south. Newington, on the Penicuik road, is a pleasant suburb, with many fine houses; the village of Morningside, more to the west, is incorporated with the town, and between Newington and Morningside is the well-built Grange district, while to the west the district of Merchiston is covered with villa residences. These quarters have a milder climate than the New Town, being sheltered from the cold and harsh easterly winds; and the view of the Pentland Hills, and of the country to the south and to the west, is very delightful. In like manner, but rather in connection with the New Town, the city has recently extended westward, on the Glasgow road, where Murrayfield, at first a cluster of villas, at some distance from the city, may now be regarded as a suburb. Towards the north, also, the New Town is completely connected by groups of villas with Granton, Trinity, Newhaven, and Leith. There is now, indeed, to the mere visitor no perceptible line of demarcation between Edinburgh and Leith.

MONUMENTS.—The monument to Lord Nelson, which stands on the highest rocky eminence, the Calton Hill, is a circular tower, in stages gradually diminishing 100 feet high; its base is 356 feet above the level of the sea. This is a conspicuous object from many parts of the city, and visitors are permitted to ascend it. Monuments to Professor Playfair and Professor Dugald Stewart are placed close together on the Calton Hill. There is also, on the southern side of the hill, near the High School, a monument of Burns; and in the Calton burying ground, a little to the west, is a monument to David Hume. The most striking feature of the Calton Hill, however, is the national monument of Scotland, which was commenced in 1822, to commemorate our victories during the then late war, but was abandoned for want of funds; the twelve columns which decorate the summit of the Calton Hill bearing the semblance of a ruin, are all there is to show for an expenditure of £13,000—more than £1,000 a column. It is very generally regarded as a monument of national folly. The foundation stone was laid by commissioners specially appointed by George IV. as patron. The original plan was to construct an edifice bearing some resemblance to the renowned Parthenon of Athens, by which the "modern Athens" would be made more like the ancient. The finest monument in Edinburgh, and one which forms a remarkable object even in a general view of the city, is that to Sir Walter Scott. It stands in Princes street gardens, and is a beautiful structure, rising to the height of 180 feet, formed on the model of the monumental crosses of the middle ages. In the centre is a marble statue of Scott, with one of his favourite dogs at his feet, the work of Steell. The design of the monument is by George M. Kemp, a self-taught artist, who died during its erection. In the niches are figures of some of the principal characters of Scott's novels and poems. The public are admitted to the galleries of the monument at a small charge, and the view from them is very fine. The foundation stone of this monument was laid on 15th August, 1840; its inauguration took place in August, 1846. The statue of Charles II., in Parliament square, has been already noticed. In the centre of St. Andrew square stands the elegant column erected by subscription, chiefly of naval officers, to the memory of the first Lord Melville; this noble pillar, the design of which was copied chiefly from Trajan's column at Rome, was begun in April, 1821, and completed in August, 1822; the entire height of the pedestal and pillar is 136 feet 4 inches, and the statue on the top 14 feet additional. Opposite the Royal Bank is a fine equestrian statue of the Earl of Hopetoun. In the same square facing George street, a group representing Alexander and Bucephalus was erected by subscription in 1884. The equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington (by Steell) is placed in front of the Register Office, Princes street. It was erected by public subscription, and represents the "Iron Duke" directing his forces on the field of battle. A fine bronze statue (by Chantrey) of William Pitt stands in the centre of George street, where it is intersected by Frederick street; another statue by the same artist, of George IV., with royal robes and sceptre, stands at a point where George street and Hanover street cross. At the intersection of George street by Castle street, a statue of the Rev. Dr. Chalmers (by Steell) was erected in 1878. On the esplanade of the castle there is a bronze statue of the Duke of York, uncle of her present Majesty, and also one of Colonel Mackenzie, C.B., who served for 42 years in the 92nd Highlanders, and who died in 1878. A fine monumental statue, erected in honour of the second Lord Melville, occupies an open space in Melville street, in the western part of the New Town. There are also statues of Allan Ramsay, the poet, of John Wilson, the author of "Noctes Ambrosianæ," Adam Black, the publisher, Dean Ramsay, and Dr. Livingstone, the great African traveller. They stand in Princes street gardens, facing Princes street, not far from one another. At the east end of St. Colme street is the elegant Eleanor cross to the memory of the late Miss Catherine Sinclair, the authoress. The Martyrs' Monument, in the old Calton burying ground, is a tall obelisk, erected in 1845, to the memory of several gentlemen who were banished in 1793 for advocating parliamentary reform. There is also a beautiful monument to Alexander Smith in Warriston Cemetery. In Charlotte square, at the end of George street, is the statue of H.R.H. Prince Albert, the inauguration of which took place in August, 1876, on the occasion of Her Majesty's visit to Edinburgh. This statue was originated immediately after his death in December, 1861. The design, by Sir John Steell, R.S.A., is that of an equestrian statue, 15 feet high, weighing eight tons, and cast in five pieces, on a granite pedestal, 17 feet in elevation, and 100 tons in weight. The Prince (as a field-marshal) is presumably returning the salute of the Volunteers, at the great review held in the Queen's Park in 1860. The horse is modelled from one of the Duke of Buccleuch's stud, and, viewed from St. George's Church, its handsome proportions, falling mane, and sweeping tail, effectively augment the conception of the portraiture. The total cost of the monument as it stands, with relative improvements in the square, was about £16,500, of which £12 000 were available for the statue, and £3,000 for the pedestal, which, although designed by Sir John Steell primarily, was architecturally proportioned by the late Mr. David Bryce, R.S.A. A recent addition to the monuments of the city is that erected in West Parliament square to the late Duke of Buccleuch by his many friends and admirers in all parts of Scotland. The memorial consists of an elaborate pedestal, with bas-reliefs and other bronze ornamentation and a colossal statue of the late Duke. The monument, designed by Rowland Anderson, LL.D., is based on the mediæval art of the fifteenth century. The plan of the pedestal is a hexagon 10 feet 6 inches in diameter at the base, and 22 feet high; the statue is 10 feet 6 inches high, so that the total height is 32 feet 6 inches. The bronze figure of the Duke in the robes of the Garter was the work of J. G. Boehm, R.A., London. The lower historical panels were executed by Clark Stanton, R.S.A; the symbolic 1 figures by W. B. Rhind; the six panels, representing incidents in the life of the late Duke, by Stuart Burnett, A.R.S.A., and the bucks, the representation of the stag-hunt, &c., by D. W. Stevenson, R.S.A., and W. Grant Stevenson, R.S.A. The total cost of the memorial was between £7,000 and £8,000.

CLUB HOUSES.—The New Club is a superior building in Princes street, erected by an association of noblemen and gentlemen. The University Club, in Princes street, was erected in 1866-7 at a cost of nearly £14,000, and is in the ornate Italian style, with Grecian decoration. The Scottish Conservative Club and the Scottish Liberal Club have both fine buildings, also in Princes street. The Caledonian United Service Club is situated in Queen street, and the Northern in George street.

THE GENERAL POST AND TELEGRAPH OFFICE, erected on the site of the old Theatre Royal, at the end of Princes street, is a large and beautiful building in the Italian style, completed in May, 1866, at a cost of about £120,000. The foundation stone was laid by the late Prince Consort in 1861.

THE INLAND REVENUE OFFICE occupies a spacious building in Waterloo place.

THE REGISTER HOUSE is the depository for the public records and registers of Scotland. The records of all suits at law, and the various documents which have been produced in actions before the supreme courts, are also placed here; and in virtue of a late act, the parish registers of births and marriages have been collected here, whilst herein are deposited the returns of births, marriages, and deaths sent in by the registrars from all parts of Scotland. This establishment, important as it is, is almost peculiar to Scotland. The collection of documents deposited here is immense, and is, of course, accumulating; but few are of ancient date, for the greater part of the papers relating to this kingdom prior to the Restoration were carried away, at a very early period, by Edward I., and at a later era by Cromwell; and a considerable portion of those that were suffered to remain were unfortunately lost, or destroyed in consequence of a fire in 1700. The most ancient state papers in this house are the letter of the Scottish barons to the Pope in 1320, and the acts of settlement of the Scottish crown upon the Stuarts in 1371 and 1373. The building is situated at the east end of Princes street, fronting the North bridge; it was planned by Robert Adam, and is a fine specimen of the Italian style. The frontage is 200 feet, and the width 120; the extended front is relieved by a pediment and Corinthian pilasters above the entrance. The structure is square, with a circular saloon in the centre, surmounted by a lead-covered dome, 50 feet in diameter. The Register House was finished in 1822, and the cost was defrayed in part by a grant from George III. of £12,000, arising from the sale of forfeited estates, and the remainder by the Government, which also provided for its maintenance. The front of the building is ornamented by an equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, by Steell. Behind the principal building is a new one, additional to it, also in the Italian style, completed in 1860, which cost £26,440. The supreme manager is termed the depute clerk register. In consequence of the greatly increased demand for space to transact the official business belonging to this important department of the public service, a very large addition was made immediately behind the site of the house where once Hogg, the Ettrick shepherd, Christopher North, and their jovial companions were wont to meet, and at which place the scene of the famous "Noctes Ambrosianæ" is laid.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE is in High street. It was founded in 1753 and completed in 1761, at a cost of upwards of £31,000. It is quadrangular, and surrounded with offices, among which are the City Council Chamber, the Magistrates Court Room, and a number of municipal offices.

THE COUNTY BUILDINGS stand near the Parliament House, at the corner of the High street and of George IV. bridge, a street which takes its name from a bridge over the Cowgate. The general plan is taken from one of the finest models of antiquity—the temple of Erectheus, in Athens—while the principal entrance is in the style of the choragic monument of Thrasyllus. The length of the eastern front is nearly one hundred and three feet, and of the northern front fifty seven. The principal floor contains a large hall, fifty feet in length and twenty-seven in breadth; a court room, forty-four feet long, thirty feet wide, and twenty-eight feet high, a committee-room, &c. Above are offices for the sheriff, sheriff clerks, &c. The building was finished in 1819, at an expense of £15,000. The County Buildings having been found insufficient, a beautiful new building was erected in 1868, a little to the south, on George IV. bridge, for the sheriff's court. It is in the Italian style of architecture, and cost upwards of £44,000.

FUEL, WATER, &C.—Edinburgh is now well supplied with coal; the different railway companies, the Union Canal, and the neighbouring pits constantly pouring in an ample quantity for the large consumption The city receives a copious supply of water from the Pentland and Moorfoot Hills, where reservoirs have been constructed from which it is brought by pipes. The supply is constant, and almost entirely of the finest spring water; it is under the management of trustees elected by Edinburgh, Leith, and Portobello. No city has purer water than Edinburgh; scarcely a trace of organic matter can be detected in it. There is a large reservoir in the city, on the Castle Hill, for the purpose of regulating the constant service. The water company was incorporated in 1819, and was transferred to the water trust in 1870. Edinburgh is illuminated with gas, produced by two companies, the works of one of which are situated in Edinburgh, not far from the palace of Holyrood, those of the other at Leith, supplying Leith as well as Edinburgh.

TRADE.—Edinburgh possesses but few manufactures; still there are some departments in which it may justly boast a superiority. Printing and publishing are carried on to a considerable extent, and many valuable works of the age have emanated from the Edinburgh press The making of paper machinery, type founding, and the manufacture of gas and water meters, iron and wire fencing, india-rubber goods, vulcanite, &c., are all branches of importance. Edinburgh ale has long been famous, and there are many extensive breweries in the city, that send immense quantities to all parts of the world.

In Banking Edinburgh takes a high place, and her banking establishments are conducted with a sagacity and accuracy which have secured for them great success; their branches are spread all over Scotland, and sub-offices have also been opened in the city itself. The banks have commodious and many of them splendid buildings. The Bank of Scotland, in Bank street, the Commercial, the Union, and the Clydesdale Banks in George street, the British Linen Company and the Royal Bank of Scotland, in St. Andrew square, are particularly worthy of notice as fine buildings. The Bank of Scotland occupies a very conspicuous place, looking down upon the valley which separates the Old Town from the New. It is one of the many noble architectural ornaments of a scene, which, as viewed from Princes street, from the Mound, and from many other points, is one of the most striking and beautiful that any city can boast. Except the Bank of Scotland, all the others have their principal seats of business in the New Town. The Bank of Scotland is the oldest banking company in Scotland, and thus naturally assumed the name which it still bears; but it has nothing of that character of a national institution which the Bank of England in some measure possesses. It was established, however, by act of parliament (the parliament of Scotland), in 1695. Next to it in anti quity is the Royal Bank of Scotland, incorporated by royal charter in 1727. The British Linen Company, now merely a bank, but at first also engaged in the linen trade, was incorporated by royal charter in 1746. After this came the Commercial Bank, established in 1810, and the National Bank of Scotland, established in 1825. The Union Bank of Scotland, established in 1830, and incorporated by act of parliament in 1862, is the representative of several banks, one of which was originally a company engaged not only in banking, but in the tobacco trade, and was founded in Edinburgh not very long after the Royal Bank. After it had become a mere banking company, it was long one of the chief banks of Edinburgh, under the name of Sir William Forbes and Co. Having united with a Glasgow bank, it assumed its present name, and it has head offices both in Edinburgh and Glasgow. The Clydesdale Bank Limited, a Glasgow banking company of recent origin, and having its head office in Glasgow, represents in Edinburgh the Edinburgh and Leith Bank afterwards, in consequence of a union, known as the Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank.

The Union Bank has the greatest authorised note circulation of any bank in Scotland, £454,346. Next to it is the British Linen Company, £438,024, The authorised circulation of the Commercial Bank is £374,880; that of the Bank of Scotland is £343,418; of the Royal Bank, £216,451; the National Bank, £297,024; and the Clydesdale Bank, £274,321. The average actual circulation, based in part, under Sir Robert Peel's Act of 1845, on the coin held by the banks, is £5,164,160. The price of stock or shares of all the banks gives proof of their prosperity. The banking business of Glasgow is in great part conducted by the banks having their head offices in Edinburgh, as is also that of all the provincial towns of Scotland. The Scottish banking companies were at one time far more numerous, but the tendency of late has been towards the incorporation of the minor banks with the great banks of Edinburgh and Glasgow.

In fire and life assurances there are many establishments of high standing, having branches in the principal towns of the United Kingdom, and who have commodious and many of them splendid buildings. Amongst these may be mentioned, the Scottish Widows' Fund, the Life Association of Scotland, the Scottish Provident Association, the Standard, the Caledonian, the Edinburgh, the Scottish Union and National, the North British and the English and Scottish Law Life Insurance Companies. The amount of business in life assurance and annuities done by the Edinburgh companies is very great; their aggregate income is considerably over five millions sterling, and their funds over forty millions sterling, and there is not one of them of which the stability is not perfectly unquestionable

From Edinburgh there are many means of transit to all parts of the United Kingdom, by rail, road, sea, and inland navigation. There are two railway stations in Edinburgh—that of the North British Company, between Princes street and the Old Town, and that of the Caledonian Company, at the west end of Princes street. From the former of these stations lines radiate in all directions, except to the south-west, to which those of the Caledonian Company chiefly extend. Extensive railway systems, with many branch lines, belong to both companies. A valuable means of water carriage is furnished by the Union Canal, between Edinburgh and Glasgow, joining the Great Canal near Larbert, but the traffic on it has much diminished since the opening of railways. The basin of the canal is situated about half a mile south-west of the Castle, and is called Port Hopetoun.

MUNICIPAL, LEGAL, AND NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS AND COURTS OF LAW.

The administration of the municipal and police affairs of the city of Edinburgh is vested in the Town Council, consisting of forty-one members. Of this number, one (the Dean of Guild) is annually returned by the Guild brethren; one (the Deacon Convener) is annually returned by the Incorporated Trades, and thirty-nine are appointed by popular election—three for each of the thirteen wards into which the city is divided. The Council appoints from the ward-elected members a lord provost, six bailies, and a city treasurer. The Lord Provost is Lord-Lieutenant of the county of the city, and his office, as respects dignity and duties, resembles that of the Lord Mayor of London, while the functions of the bailies are analogous to those of the aldermen. Of the ward-elected members of Council one-third part must retire annually, but the Lord Provost and the City Treasurer hold their offices for three years from the time of appointment. The magistrates of Edinburgh hold criminal and civil courts, and along with the Midlothian Sheriffs are judges in the police court. The Dean of Guild presides in the Dean of Guild Court which exercises jurisdiction in matters relating to the erection, alteration and sanitary arrangement of buildings, and is possessed of considerable powers for ensuring the public safety in regard to removal or reconstruction of insecure and dangerous buildings within the city. The City Treasurer is chairman of the Treasurer's or Finance Committee, and represents in the Town Council the financial department of the Corporation business. Of the principal officers of the Corporation there are—the Town Clerk, who is the Council's secretary and the recorder of its minutes; the City Chamberlain, who has the accounting with the Council's revenues (about £250,000 a year); and the City Assessors, who are the legal advisers of the judges in the several city courts. There were formerly fourteen incorporated trades in the city, but now there are only thirteen, the Surgeons and Barbers (who had a "seal of cause" from the Town Council in 1505) having ceased to exist as an incorporation connected with the city trades. The following are the thirteen existing incorporations:—1. The Goldsmiths, formerly attached to the Hammermen, were constituted in 1581, and have their hall in South Bridge street. 2. The Skinners or Glovers were incorporated in 1586. 3. The Furriers were constituted by Act of Council, in 1593. 4 The Hammermen were incorporated in 1483, and consisted at first of blacksmiths, goldsmiths, lorimers, saddlers, cutlers, and armourers, but the goldsmiths were separated from them in 1581; they meet in the Chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, in the Cowgate. 5 and 6. The Wrights and Masons were constituted in 1475, but by a decree of the Court of Session in 1703 the bowmakers, glaziers, plumbers, and upholsterers were added to the masons; and to the wrights were attached the painters, slaters, sievewrights, and coopers; this incorporation is known also by the title of the United Incorporation of St. Mary's Chapel. 7. The Tailors were incorporated in 1500. 8. The Bakers were in existence as a corporate body before 1522, but the exact period of their constitution is unknown. 9. The Fleshers (or butchers) were incorporated before 1488. 10. The Cordwainers (or shoemakers) in 1449. 11. The Websters (or weavers) in 1475. 12. The Waulkers (or cloth workers) were incorporated in 1500, and the Hatters were united with them in 1672. 13. The Bonnetmakers were incorporated in 1530, and in 1640 the trade of Lilster (or dyer) was united with them. The Candlemakers were chartered by the magistrates in 1517, although they are not one of the incorporated trades, and have no vote in the election of the Deacon Convener. Scottish trade incorporations formerly possessed exclusive rights of trading within their respective burghs, but these privileges were abolished by statute in 1846. The incorporated trades or "craftsmen" of Edinburgh possess considerable properties and funds, and they maintain and manage an institution (the Maiden Hospital) for the education and bringing of daughters of freemen craftsmen.

Before the Scottish Burgh Reform Act, passed in 1833, the Corporation of Edinburgh was of a close character, though not altogether without an admixture of popular representation. The city has since been divided into thirteen wards for municipal and parliamentary elections. Prior to the Redistribution of Seats Bill Edinburgh returned two members to Parliament, but on the passing of that Bill the city was separated into four divisions, and was given two additional representatives. The gentlemen at present sitting are—East Division, Robert Wallace, Esq.; West Division, Thomas R. Buchanan, Esq.; Central Division, William M'Ewan, Esq.; South Division, Right Hon. H. C. E. Childers. The county of Midlothian, which returns one member, is represented by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. The Police Establishment was remodelled in 1822, and several important changes have been made in it since from time to time. When the boundaries of the city were extended in 1882, a considerable addition was made. The police force now numbers 445 men. The chief police office is situated in High-street, and there are eight sub-offices in different parts of the city, two of these being handsome buildings in West Port and Causewayside. A Police Court is held daily, the judges being the bailies and the sheriff substitute, who preside in alternate months. A Burgh Court is held daily, presided over by justices of the peace for the county of the city of Edinburgh. The Lock-up House is at the back of the Parliament House, and is for the reception of offenders under examination. The Canongate Tolbooth might have been mentioned among the relics of antiquity. It is a gloomy but picturesque building, of the end of the 16th century, with corner turrets, a small spire, a clock fixed in a wooden projection, and an outside stair. Her Majesty's prison is situated on the south side of the Calton Hill. It originally consisted of a bridewell and the governor's house, both of which were of the peculiar early English castellated style, designed by the celebrated Mr. Adam upon Jeremy Bentham's principle, and founded 30th November, 1791. About 1817 an additional block of the same style and also a new house for the governor were erected on the west side of the bridewell. About 1846, a block of the later Norman castellated style, from designs by Brown, was erected on the east side of the bridewell. In 1882 the bridewell was demolished, and two new blocks of a style in harmony with the erections of 1817 and 1846 have been built partly on the site of the old bridewell. Further alterations have lately been completed, and it now contains about 500 cells.

COURTS OF LAW AND LEGAL INSTITUTIONS.—College of Justice.—The legal profession is divided into the following classes:—1, Thirteen Judges of the Court of Session, styled Lords of Session; 2, Advocates (barristers) who possess the privilege of pleading before every court in Scotland, and also in Scotch appeals before the House of Lords; 3, Writers to the Signet (similar to solicitors in England), Solicitors before the Supreme Courts, Advocates' First Clerks, Solicitors-at-Law, and Chartered Accountants. These three classes form the College of Justice.

The Court of Session and Teind Court—The Court of Session, the highest civil court in Scotland, originally consisted of 14 judges and a president, one half of the judges and the president being churchmen, and the king having the privilege of appointing three or four peers or lords of his great council to sit and vote with the lords of session. Ecclesiastics were appointed judges, even after the Reformation. Till 1808 the judges all sat in one court; but it was then divided into two separate courts, known as the First Division and the Second Division, which, however, might be brought together in cases of difficulty. In 1810 the junior judges were appointed to sit separately as Lords Ordinary, each trying cases in the first instance. In 1830 the number of judges was reduced to 13, and so it continues. The Lords Ordinary are five in number, forming what is called the Outer House; The First Division and Second Division, consisting of four judges each, form the Inner House. The Lord President presides over the First Division and over the united court; the Lord Justice Clerk over the Second Division. The Lords Ordinary may be called in to take part in the hearing of a case in the whole court. Cases may be carried from the lords ordinary to the Inner House, but only to that division of it to which the Lord Ordinary is attached who tried the case in the first instance. The junior Lord Ordinary acts as Lord Ordinary of bills, disposing of summary petitions and business requiring special despatch; but during the vacations of the court this office is taken by all the judges in rotation, except the Lord President and the Lord Justice Clerk. The judges of the Court of Session are appointed for life, and are always members of the Faculty of Advocates. They assume titles like those of peers, prefixing lord either to their surname or to the name of an estate. The judgment of the Court of Session may be appealed to the House of Lords. In 1815 trial by jury was introduced in civil cases in Scotland, to the extent of deciding as to matters of fact and fixing the amount of damages. Jury trials are presided over by one or more of the judges of the Court of Session. The jury in civil cases consists of 12 jurymen, and a unanimous verdict is received at once; but if they cannot all agree, the verdict of a majority of nine is received after a certain time. The Teind Court is held every alternate Wednesday during term, and has the power of regulating and enforcing the payment of tithes or teinds; for the clergy cannot themselves exact their tithes, which are obtained from the landowners, and not from the tenants; it is through the medium of this court only they receive them. It belongs to this court to determine the amount of stipend which the clergyman of each parish shall receive out of the teinds of that parish, granting augmentations from time to time, when the teinds are not already exhausted. The judges of the Inner House of the Court of Session and one Lord Ordinary are the judges of this court.

The High Court of Justiciary is the supreme criminal court, and is presided over by the Lord Justice General, which office is held by the Lord President of the Court of Session. Next to him, and really the first acting judge, is the Lord Justice Clerk, subordinate to whom are five other judges, who are also Lords of Session. At stated times, the Lords of Justiciary proceed on circuits, holding courts in different towns The Lord Advocate is the public prosecutor, and by him actions are raised in this court, according to his discretion. The causes which come before this court are tried by a jury of 15 persons, a majority of whom decide the same, from which there is no appeal.

The Solicitors before the Supreme Court, as an association, were first publicly acknowledged in 1754, by an act of sederunt of the Court of Session, in which were set forth rules for their direction; these rules were altered and improved by another act in 1772. In 1797, they obtained a royal charter, which erected them into a body corporate, by the title Solicitors in the Court of Session, the High Court of Justiciary, and the Commission of Teinds. Members of this corporation are required to attend three classes of the Scotch law and conveyancing, previous to admission.

Solicitors-at-Law were incorporated by royal charter 1780. They formerly practised before the Sheriff Commissary and City Courts, of which they had a monopoly; but all are now entitled to practise before the supreme and inferior courts like other law agents. Entrants or candidates for admission are required to serve a regular apprenticeship with a member of the incorporation, and, after going through a private examination formally before the Society, and now similar to other law agents, are admitted. In 1884, the Society obtained an act of parliament by which, after providing an annuity of £52to each widow of all past or present members of the society, the funds are to be divided among the present members. The present privileges of members to practise in the courts are reserved by the private statute.

Sheriff Court of Edinburgh.—The courts are held in the Sheriff Court, George IV. bridge. A court for the Leith district is held in the Sheriff Court-room, Constitution street, Leith, on Tuesday at 10 o'clock in each week during the sessions of court. The Leith district includes the parishes of South Leith, North Leith, and Duddingston (excepting that part of the parish of South Leith which is within the parliamentary boundaries of Edinburgh). Appeals are taken by the Sheriff every Wednesday at 12 o'clock, and an ordinary court is held every Tuesday at 12 o'clock, and every Friday at 11 o'clock during session. A Sheriff Small Debt Court for the county of Edinburgh is held within the Sheriff Court, Edinburgh, every Wednesday, at 10 o'clock; and for the Leith district every Tuesday at 10.15 o'clock, within the Sheriff Court-room, Leith, during the sessions of court. All civil causes are competent in these courts for any debt or demand not exceeding the sum of £12 sterling. Summonses are issued for these courts daily at the respective clerks' offices, George IV. bridge, Edinburgh, from 10 till 4, and Constitution street, Leith, from 11 till 3.

The Commissary Court.—Since the year 1830, the duties which this court formerly performed have been transferred to the Court of Session; still, however, a commissary and three deputies take cognisance of testaments of persons dying abroad, having property in Scotland.

The Court of Exchequer.—This court, which till recently was presided over by the chief baron and three ordinary barons, has undergone such a change as to be virtually abolished. The duties are now performed by certain judges of the Court of Session, in rotation.

The Lyon Court, which is nearly obsolete, formerly regulated state pageants, executed the writs of supreme courts, and decided upon armorial bearings. In the execution of the duties still remaining, the "Lord Lyon" is assisted by a body of messengers-at-arms, heralds, and pursuivants.

The Faculty of Advocates.—The members of this society occupy a position similar to that of barristers in England. It appears to have been instituted about the same time as the College of Justice (1532), and was at first limited to ten members. Although candidates for admission are not required to follow any prescribed course of preparatory study, they must produce one of certain University degrees held as qualifying, or pass a tolerably strict examination—first on general scholarship, and then, after a lapse of a year, on civil law, international law, and on the laws of Scotland. An advocate, when admitted, is privileged to plead in any court in Scotland (unless debarred by special statute, as in the Small Debts Acts), and also before the House of Lords. It is from this society that the bench is supplied with judges, and that the sheriffs of counties are selected. Though possessing no charter of incorporation, it has always exercised corporate privileges, by electing its own office-bearers, the principal of whom is the president, or, as he is styled, the Dean of Faculty. The library, which is by far the largest, as well as the most valuable, in Scotland, will be described hereafter.

The Writers to the Signet are an important body, who have the sole right of passing warrants under the seal or signet of the reigning monarch, in order to render them valid; in addition to which they act as conveyancers, and as attorneys in the supreme courts. This body, besides its other functionaries, has a professor of conveyancing in the University of Edinburgh. The qualification for admission is an apprenticeship for five years; and the age for entering into indenture not under seventeen, provided always that where an applicant for indenture is not under the age of nineteen and holds a degree in Law, or in Arts, of a University of Great Britain or Ireland, granted after examination, the period of indenture may be three years. The members of this body amount to over 370; they have a valuable library, and an ample fund for widows.

The Justice of Peace Court is of no earlier origin in Scotland than 1609. The Justices are empowered to judge in cases of breaches of the peace; to regulate highways, bridges, and ferries; to see the laws executed against vagrants, beggars, transgressors of the game laws, and frauds against the revenue, besides many other branches of jurisdiction. But the principal business of the justices in Edinburgh comes before them as a court for a speedy settlement of debts under £5, commonly called the Small Debt Court, which sits weekly in Edinburgh, and at longer intervals in the different villages of the country.

The Convention of the Royal Burghs, instituted by James III., meets annually in Edinburgh, and consists of a commission and assessors from each burgh. The Lord Provost of Edinburgh is perpetual president, and the city clerk of Edinburgh is clerk of the convention. The Court had considerable powers until the passing of the Burgh Reform Act, but is now much like a national Chamber of Commerce. The place of meeting of the annual convention is the Court-room of the High Court of Justiciary, when held in Edinburgh, and the committees meet in the Edinburgh Council Chambers.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

The parochial churches of Edinburgh are erected and maintained out of the funds of the burgh; from the same source, and from the port dues at Leith and Port Hopetoun the stipends of the ministers are derived. There are thirteen parishes, of which the ministers receive a stipend of £600 a year, within what was the old parish of Edinburgh; whilst St. Cuthbert's, or the West Church and the Canongate, also old parishes, are provided with stipends from other sources. Several churches have also been erected by voluntary subscription, the ministers of which are maintained without burden to the funds of the city. It will be enough to notice only those ecclesiastical edifices which are most important as architectural features of the city, or from historic associations.

ST. GILES'S CATHEDRAL.—This spacious and venerable metropolitan church stands on an elevated site, in the High-street, forming one side of Parliament-square, and before the alterations and repairs, which took place between 1830 and 1832, its shape was cruciform, and its dimensions as follow: Length from east to west, 206 feet; breadth at the centre, 129 feet; at the west end, 110 feet; and at the east, 76 feet. A square tower rises from the centre, surmounted by a crown formed of intersecting richly-ornamented arches; from the apex of the crown springs a small spire, the summit of which is 161 feet in height, and may be seen from a great distance. The renovation of the church has altered a little its original form, as well as its dimensions. Of St. Giles, the patron saint, little more is known than that he was born in Greece, in the sixth century, and died in France. One of his arm bones, enshrined in silver, was deposited in the church, which was erected in the fifteenth century, on the site of the former parish church of Edinburgh. It was made a collegiate church by James III., in 1466, and was partitioned into four churches after the Reformation, when it was appropriated to the Presbyterian worship then established. When episcopacy was introduced into the Protestant Church of Scotland, and Charles I. made Edinburgh a bishopric, which it had never been in Roman Catholic times, this was made the cathedral. Since 1688 it has been used for the worship of the Scottish Established Church. It is proper to mention that the Government contributed £12,000 towards the alterations made in 1830-2. St. Giles's has been the scene of important historical events. Here John Knox preached; and here James VI. bade farewell to his Scottish subjects, before his departure to take possession of the throne of England. Here Jenny Geddes struck the first blow at the episcopacy of Laud when she hurled the old stool on which she had been sitting at the head of the dean as he began to read from the book of Common Prayer. It was in this church also that the solemn league and covenant was signed by a committee of the Scottish Parliament and the English Commissioners in 1643. In 1871 a restoration committee was appointed, with Dr. William Chambers as chairman. The object of the committee was eventually to restore, as far as practicable, the interior of St. Giles; but to effect this step by step, as circumstances permitted; and to confine operations in the first place to the choir. In June, 1872, when the subscriptions for the above object had reached £2,000, the committee, with the consent of the authorities concerned, commenced the work. The galleries were wholly removed, thereby developing the fine old pillars, which were mended with stone to resemble the original. The baldachino, and the furniture of the royal pew, were taken away; and the pews and the pulpit were removed. Under the direction of Mr. W. Hay, architect, the passages were laid with Minton tiles, bearing antique Scottish devices. A pulpit of Caen stone, exquisitely carved by Mr. John Rhind, an Edinburgh sculptor, was placed against the pillar on the south side nearest the east window. All the seatings are of oak. The royal seat is in the form of a throne of most elaborate workmanship of carved oak. The lower part of the throne, to the height of four feet, is partly close panelled, with ornamental Gothic tracery, and partly open tracery and carving, surmounted with a delicately-carved cornice. On the inside the seat and back to this height are stuffed and covered with dark crimson morocco leather. The back of the throne above this is elaborately panelled with Gothic tracery in various forms of foliation, several of the compartments having shields with royal and national devices. A large circular panel in the upper portion contains the ancient royal arms of Scotland—viz.: the lion rampant on a double tressured shield, with the unicorns as supporters. The sides of the throne are of open traceried panels, with stiles supported with clustered bust resses and crocketed pinnacles. There is then another carved cornice. Over this is the canopy, of a polygonal plan, with elaborately groined soffit, having ribs and carved bosses at the intersections. The canopy is about 14 feet in height. The panels are separated by stiles having crocketed pinnacles. These are prolonged below the base of the canopy, and give support to a series of cusped arches, which add greatly to the effect of the design. At each end of the throne are five stalls for those in immediate attendance on Royalty or the High Commissioner, and between these stalls and the throne are seats for the pages. The stalls are constructed like the ordinary stalls of a cathedral, with panelled and traceried fronts supporting the book boards, and behind the stalls, against the wall, is a beautifully panelled reredos with carved cornice. The reading or prayer desk in front of the throne is a very handsome piece of work. The book-board is supported by two sides or "buffets," over three inches thick, the edges moulded and carved, the upper parts having carved angelic figures in support. The front is an elaborate panel of open tracery. The whole stands upon a platform thirty-two feet long by eight feet six inches wide, elevated four feet above the floor of the church. There has also been erected, for the incumbent and the royal chaplains, a series of seven stalls in oak, which are placed against the east wall, under the stone reredos, and behind the communion table. They are of the ordinary form of cathedral stalls. The ends and divisions are beautifully panelled and carved. The low screen in front is generally of open tracery, with the exception of the lower panels, which are exquisitely carved, and are really works of art. The screen is divided into compartments by standards opposite each stall division, with small pillars having carved caps and bases. The cope of the divisions rises above the book board, the ends terminating in carved bases. In 1879 a similar process of restoration was effected through the munificence of Dr. William Chambers, the eminent publisher, on the southern section of the church embracing the Preston and Montrose and Chepman aisles; the latter built by William Chepman, the Scottish Caxton. Here many characteristic features of fifteenth century art were disclosed, including a finely groined roof in both aisles; several ancient coats of arms; various elaborately carved pillars, the bases and capitals of which were in wonderful preservation, although the pillars themselves had been very much mutilated by the restoration of 1829; a mural shrine dedicated to the passion of Christ, and other interesting objects. Within the Chepman aisle stands now a baptismal font, in Caen-stone, by Rhind, Edinburgh, on the model of Thorwaldsen's famous work at Copenhagen. The stained glass windows in the choir are the work of Ballantine and Son, Edinburgh. The restoration of the entire remaining portion of the building was completed in 1883. The public having subscribed ten thousand pounds to provide a new church for West St. Giles's congregation, which worshipped in a part of the building, the late Dr. Chambers munificently undertook and completed the work at his own expense. On the east wall of the Montrose aisle is the recently erected memorial to the memory of the famous Marquis of Montrose, who distinguished himself in the cause of royalty during the civil war which preceded the Restoration. The monument is in the Renaissance style of the seventeenth century, the principal feature in the design being a semicircular arch deeply recessed, having in the recess a sarcophagus of a highly ornate character, with black marble bier carrying the recumbent figure of the Marquis in white marble. The monument, which stands 16 feet high, and measures 9 feet across, cost about £1,000, defrayed mainly by subscriptions from members of the clan Graham. The designs were prepared by Dr. Rowland Anderson, architect, and the work was executed in coloured marbles and alabaster by Mr. Rhind, sculptor.

NEW AND OLD GREYFRIARS CHURCHES.—The old Greyfriars Church, which is situated not far from the Grassmarket, was founded in the year 1612, where formerly stood a monastery of the Franciscans or Greyfriars. In 1650 the interior of the church was burned by Cromwell's soldiers. The spire, which was used as a powder magazine, was unfortunately destroyed by an explosion on the 7th of May, 1718. The magistrates built a new church at the western end of the old one in 1721, at the expense of £3,045. The old church was burnt, in consequence of the overheating of a flue, in 1845, but has since been rebuilt. It was in old Greyfriars Church, and in the churchyard adjacent, that the National Covenant was signed in 1638.

THE TRON CHURCH, so called from a tron or weighing machine which at one time stood near it, and to which, in former times, it was customary to nail false notaries and other malefactors by the ears, is situated in the High street, at the corner of South Bridge street. An inscription on the doorway informs the reader that it was formerly called Christ Church, and consecrated in 1647. The front, towards High street, is handsome, with a main and two side doorways, with semi-Gothic windows, and the base of a turret in the centre, ornamented with pilasters. The original steeple was destroyed by fire in 1824, and the present very ornamental one was erected on 1828.

LADY YESTER'S CHURCH, in Infirmary street, was originally founded in 1647, principally by the munificence of Margaret Kerr, Lady Yester. It was taken down in 1803, and the present elegant Gothic building was erected on its site.

CANONGATE CHURCH, a Gothic building in the form of a cross, founded in 1688, was built at the expense of £2,400, from a legacy left by Thomas Moodie, a pious citizen of Edinburgh. This church has two ministers, one nominated by the crown, the other by the Town Council and inhabitants of Canongate. Many distinguished persons repose in the churchyard; Adam Smith, Dugald Stewart, and Ferguson the Poet, among the number. The gravestone of the latter was placed here by the poet Burns.

ST. CUTHBERT'S CHURCH, or the West Kirk, situated near the base of the rock on which the castle stands, is a plain building with a spire. It has two tiers of galleries The burial ground is spacious, and many of the monuments are costly.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH stands on the north side of George street, in the New Town. It is surmounted with a fine tapering spire, 168 feet high, in which is a chime of eight bells. The whole is elegantly finished. The church is an oval. It has an historical celebrity, as the scene of the disruption of the Church of Scotland, which took place at the meeting of the General Assembly on the 18th May, 1843. It contains a fine organ.

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, on the west side of Charlotte square, forms the terminating object of George street. The dome, which is seen to advantage in almost every direction, was intended as a miniature representation of that of St. Paul's, London. The building cost £33,000, and is calculated to contain 1,600 people. It was erected in 1814.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, in Bellevue crescent, was erected in 1824, at a cost of £14,000. It has a Corinthian portico and an elegant spire 186 feet high. The church will contain 1,800 people.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH stands in St. Vincent street; its architecture is in the mixed Roman style, its shape octagonal, with a tower 163 feet high. It was erected in 1828, and cost £25,000, and will accommodate 1,600 hearers.

TRINITY COLLEGE ESTABLISHED CHURCH, on the south side of Jeffrey street, was built in 1871-2, after designs by Mr. Lessells. It has a tower and spire 115 feet high, and is largely constructed of the materials of old Trinity College Church, situated at the foot of Leith wynd, which was founded in 1462 by Mary of Guildres.

There are altogether twenty-six places of worship belonging to the Church of Scotland in Edinburgh, of which three have two ministers each.

THE ASSEMBLY HALL of the Established Church, also called the Victoria Hall or Victoria Church, is one of the noblest buildings in Edinburgh. It was built in 1844, and cost £16,000. It has a lofty and extremely beautiful spire, and occupies a commanding situation on the Castle Hill, fronting the Lawnmarket. It is the place of meeting of the General Assembly.

SCOTTISH EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This communion possesses many places of worship in Edinburgh, several of which are very fine buildings. The service is conducted after the ritual of the Church of England. Scotland is divided by this body into seven dioceses, over which preside the same number of bishops. The clergy are mainly supported from the produce of the pew rents.

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL, Manor place, is one of the most important ecclesiastical buildings erected in this country since the Reformation. The architect, the late Sir Gilbert Scott, founded his design on the early pointed style. The plan consists of choir, transept and nave, with north and south aisles terminating in towers (incomplete) at the west; central tower and spire 290 feet in height; transepts with east and west aisle, and choir of four bays, with north and south aisles. Excepting the great rose windows in nave and transept gables the windows are all of lancet form, and the general character of the building is simple and massive, though very rich in detail. The chief portal at the west end of the nave and that in the south transept are very elaborately treated. Internally the length is 278 feet, and the breadth (taken across the nave and aisles) 76 feet. The aisles throughout, as well as the central crossing and choir, are vaulted in stone and concrete. The vaulting at the east end of the choir is remarkable as springing (as in an apse) from between the three equal lancets of the great west window. The nave and transepts are vaulted in oak with richly moulded ribs and carved bosses; and in these parts of the church the triforium is open, but in the choir closed. The choir stalls are under the crossing, which is raised and severed from the nave by a low screen of marble and mosaic. The reredos is of alabaster, containing a marble group representing the Crucifixion (by Miss Grant). The font (under the south-west tower) is plain, but of alabaster. The organ (4 manuals, by Willis) stands in the north transept. There are a number of stained glass memorial windows by Kempe, Burlington and Grylls, and Clayton and Bell. The tower contains ten bells. The cathedral is seated for 2,000, about three-fourths of the seats being free. The funds for the erection of this noble building (about £100,000) were derived from a bequest of two ladies, the late Misses Walker, of Coates. The foundation-stone was laid by the Duke of Buccleuch on the 21st May, 1874, and the opening ceremonial took place in October, 1879. The cost of the building so far as it has gone is stated to be £110,000. The bishop is patron.

ALL SAINTS', Brougham street, in the 13th century Gothic style, was built in 1867. It has clerestoried nave and aisle; bell turret, and narthex of two storeys, the lower serving as a vestibule, the upper opening into the nave after the manner of a triforium, and used as a chapel; deep transepts; chancel of equal height with nave, and terminating with an apse. The principal roofs are barrel-vaulted internally The altar piece, designed by Burgess, represents the Annunciation; seated for 600. Patrons, the Vestry.

CHRIST CHURCH, Morningside, style, 13th century French Gothic, built 1876. Wide nave with walls internally low; quasi-transept. The roofs are open to the ridge, and, in common with the interior, generally much bedizened. Tower and spire north-east of north transept, serving as entrance and organ chamber. Narrow and lofty memorial chancel, ending in polygonal apse, with processional aisle. The chancel roof is groined in wood, the walls adorned with rich diapering carved in the stone, and elsewhere relieved with colour, while a series of fine designs in stained glass fill the lofty windows of the apsidal clerestory. Under the nave there is a large hall used for congregational purposes.

ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST, west end of Princes street, is in the perpendicular Gothic style, and has nave with clerestory, north and south aisles, western tower, apsidal chancel. The proportions of the building are extremely good; the eastern window is of stained glass, as are also those above the pillars. It was built in 1818 at the cost of £1,500.

OLD ST PAUL, Jeffrey street. The old church was used as an Episcopal chapel in 1688, and was once the only Episcopal church within the ancient city walls. It has now been taken down and a new church erected on the same site, which was opened by the Bishop of Edinburgh, on the 27th January, 1883. The style is Gothic, and it is seated for 300. Patrons, the Dean and Chapter of St. Mary's Cathedral.

ST. PAUL'S, York place, is also Gothic, with four octagonal towers at its angles; it has buttresses surmounted with pinnacles, and the conspicuous situation which it occupies at the corner of York place and Broughton street is felicitous for the display of its beauty. In one of its four turrets hangs a bell formerly used in the Chapel Royal of Holyrood. It was built in 1818 at a cost of £12,000, and is seated for 1,200.

ST. PETER'S, Sutton place, Newington, built in 1859, is in the early decorated style, and has nave with aisles, narthex and distinct octagonal baptistry, tower and spire, apsidal chancel, with aisles serving as organ chamber and vestry. It is seated for 500, Patrons, Trustees and Vestry.

ST. THOMAS', Rutland place, is in the Norman style, built in 1882, and is seated for 700. Patrons, the Vestry.

HOLY TRINITY, Dean bridge, is a fine building admirably situated, built in 1838, and is seated for 590. Patrons, the Trustees.

ST. COLUMBA, Johnston terrace, built in 1846, is in the early English style, with nave and chancel, sacristy on south of chancel, gallery at west end over porch and vestry. A large portion of the stones of which the walls are built were taken from the ruins of the chapel in the Palace of Queen Mary of Guise, on Castle Hill. It is seated for 300. Patrons, the Vestry.

ST. ANDREW, St. John street, is in the Norman style, built in 1857, and enlarged in 1874. Further improvements were made, and a memorial window to David Anderson, of Moredun, placed in the chancel in 1884. It is seated for 550. Patrons, the Vestry.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This body of Presbyterian dissenters has many places of worship in Edinburgh, some of them large.

NICOLSON STREET CHURCH is on the west side of Nicolson street, and its lofty Gothic front is very commanding. The fine Saxon arch of the doorway springs from two sculptured human heads. For many years Dr. Jamieson, the compiler of the "Scottish Dictionary," was the minister of this numerous congregation.

BROUGHTON PLACE CHURCH is a massive building, with a portico and Doric columns; it will contain 1,600 worshippers.

ROSE STREET CHURCH is a handsome building, in the eastern division of Rose street, and is very capacious.

NEWINGTON U. P. CHURCH, in Causewayside, is an ornament to that neighbourhood.

The United Presbyterian Church, which has Presbyteries in England as well as Scotland, holds a meeting of synod annually in Edinburgh, on the Monday after the first Sunday in May. The meetings are held in the Theological Hall, Castle terrace.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

This, which is the largest of the non-established churches of Scotland, holds the meetings of its General Assembly in Edinburgh annually, at the same time with that of the Established Church. These meetings take place in a beautiful hall erected for the purpose, and capable of containing from 1,600 to 1,800 persons. This hall is situated behind the Free Church College; through the quadrangle, which is the principal entrance to it, a broad flight of steps leading up. The hall was erected in 1858-59.

THE FREE CHURCH COLLEGE, a theological seminary, stands at the head of the Mound, and is a very beautiful edifice in the Elizabethan style, designed by Mr. Playfair, founded in 1846, and consisting of a quadrangle, 84 feet by 56, with two centre towers 121 feet in height, and a tower at the north-east corner 95 feet in height. The college has a staff of seven theological professors, including a professor of natural science. The library was founded in 1843, and was removed to the present buildings in 1850. It contains about 40,000 volumes, mainly theological. The Free Church has also theological seminaries in Glasgow and Aberdeen. It has nearly forty places of worship in Edinburgh, some of them very beautiful buildings, adorned with lofty spires, as Free St. George's, Shandwick place, Free St. Mary's, at the corner of Albany street and Broughton street, Barclay Church in Bruntsfield Links, and Free Buccleuch Church, near George square, Free St. John's, near the Victoria Hall, and Free New North Church, near the Greyfriars Churches, are also worthy of notice.

BAPTISTS, CONGREGATIONALISTS, &c.

There are six Baptist churches in Edinburgh. One place of worship in Dublin street, is a beautiful building. There are seven Congregationalist churches, and the only place of worship of any external beauty is Augustine Chapel on George IV. bridge. The Catholic Apostolic Church, at the corner of East London street, was opened in 1876. It is in the later Norman style, measures 200 feet in length, 45 feet in height to the wall head, and 64 feet in height to the apex of the internal roof vault; and comprises a nave, a chancel, a west end tower, and a baptistry. The cost was about £35,000. The places of worship of minor Protestant denominations do not require special notice.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

The principal Roman Catholic Church, St. Mary's, occupies a site near York place, in Broughton street, and is a handsome Gothic edifice; it was built by subscription in 1813, and cost £8,000. It has a very fine organ; and above the altar is an excellent painting by Vandyke, representing a dead Saviour. There is a second chapel (St. Patrick's), of smaller dimensions, in Cowgate; and a larger Roman Catholic place of worship, called the Church of the Sacred Heart, lighted by cupolas, is situated in Lauriston street.

EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENTS, LIBRARIES, INSTITUTIONS, SOCIETIES, HOSPITALS, &c.

THE UNIVERSITY.

Edinburgh could not boast of a University at an early period. Robert Reid, Bishop of Orkney, left a bequest of 8,000 merks in 1558 for the purpose of founding one, and the magistrates in consequence purchased part of the ground on which the University now stands, which was then quite out of the town. There stood the house called Kirk o' Field, where Darnley, the husband of Queen Mary, was murdered in 1567. Some of the church property confiscated at the Reformation was assigned for the support of the proposed University. In the year 1579 a collection of books was bequeathed to it by Mr. Clement Little, as a foundation for a library. The building was begun in 1580; a charter of erection was granted by James VI. in 1582; and in the year following the college was opened for the reception of students, although at first with only one class and one regent or teacher. In 1617 James was so pleased with the progress which his favourite university had made that he honoured the establishment by calling it "The College of King James VI." In 1619 Sir William Nisbet, provost of Edinburgh, gave £1,000 Scots (£83 6s. 8d. sterling) towards the maintenance of a professor of divinity. The Protector Cromwell endowed the University with an annuity of £200 sterling. William III. also bestowed on it £300 a year; but part of this grant was afterwards withdrawn by Queen Anne. By an Act of Parliament passed in 1858, for the regulation of Scotch universities, a general Council of the University of Edinburgh has been constituted, consisting of the principal, professors, graduates and persons who, before August, 1861, satisfied the University Commissioners of their having completed a certain course of attendance at the University. The affairs of the University are now immediately under the care of the Senatus Academicus and University Court, which was constituted at the same time. The General Council has the right of electing a Chancellor, who holds office for life; and on the 28th October, 1859, Lord Brougham, an alumnus of the University, was elected its first chancellor. The University Court consists of the rector, the principal, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and five assessors. The Act of 1858 took from the Town Council of Edinburgh not only the government of the University but the patronage of its chairs, which was transferred to seven curators, three of whom are nominated by the University Court, and four by the Town Council. The number of professors is now 38, classified into the four faculties of divinity, law, medicine, and the arts, the last named including literature and general science. The school of medicine in this University, which has since risen to so much eminence, was first founded in 1721. Some of the present professors in the faculty of medicine are among the most distinguished men in Europe, and the University of Edinburgh has in former times had men of equal eminence, not only in the faculty of medicine, but also in other faculties, of whom it may be enough to mention Dugald Stewart, Sir William Hamilton, and Dr. Chalmers. The students are not obliged to adopt any particular mode of living or of dress. None of them live within the walls of the college, as at Oxford and Cambridge. The winter session begins about the middle of October and terminates about the end of the first week in April. The summer session extends over the months of May, June, and July. Students are attracted to Edinburgh, not only from every part of the British dominions, but from almost every nation in Europe, and every state in America. The old building being found too small, part of it was taken down, and the present one begun in 1789. The architect was Mr. Robert Adam. But the sum collected, though large, being far from sufficient for the erection of a building of such elegance and magnitude, it was necessarily stopped. In 1815, however, Parliament made a yearly grant of £10,000 for ten years, to be expended in the completion of the building, under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by Parliament. A handsome portico, supported by stone columns of the Doric order, twenty-six feet high, forms the chief entrance. The east and west sides are 255 feet in length, and the south and north 356 feet. The design of the interior quadrangle is by Mr. Playfair. The accommodation then provided proved inadequate for the rapid growth of the University under the Universities Act (185). To meet more particularly the increasing requirements of the faculty of medicine, extensive additional buildings have been constructed in Teviot row, in convenient proximity to the old buildings and to the Royal Infirmary. In these the faculty of medicine is provided with laboratories and class rooms unequalled probably in Great Britain for their extent and equipment. The music class-room in Park place, the finest university building of its kind, was erected in 1860. The organ therein is of European celebrity, and the museum contains a unique collection of musical instruments.

The University Natural History Museum and the Museum of Science and Art of Scotland.—Sir Andrew Balfour, to whom Edinburgh owes the institution of the Botanic Gardens, was also the founder of the University Museum of Natural History. His collections, which were very extensive, were placed, after his death, in 1694, in the hall of the college; and in 1697 Sir Robert Sibbald presented the college with a great variety of curiosities, both native and exotic, but from neglect it was almost completely destroyed. In the present century, the Museum, under the care of the late Professor Jameson, was enriched by various and extensive collections, particularly by the purchase of the magnificent one of M. Dufresne, of Paris; and the collection of birds alone contains upwards of 3,000 specimens, besides minerals, &c. The whole collection is exceeded by few in Europe. It was some time ago removed from the place which it formerly occupied in the University to the Museum of Science and Art of Scotland, which has been erected behind the University, and the foundation stone of which was laid by His Royal Highness Prince Albert on the same day with that of the new General Post Office. This building is now completed by the erection of the west wing, which was finished in 1887. This wing is being filled on the ground floor with a fine series of mechanical models; on the first floor with a very complete ethnographical collection or specimens of the arts and manufactures of savage races, and on the upper floor with the extensive collection of rocks, minerals, and fossils formed by the Geological Survey of Scotland. These arrangements will admit of the main floor of the great hall being mainly devoted to illustrations of architecture and sculpture. The collection of specimens illustrative of the arts—raw materials, progress and processes of manufacture, implements, and machines, products, &c.—is probably unrivalled in the world. It was begun by the late lamented Dr. George Wilson, professor of technology in the University of Edinburgh.

The University Library, the nucleus of which was a collection of books left to "Edinburgh and Kirk of God," by Mr. Clement Littil in 1581, contains about 180,000 volumes, besides several thousand MSS. Among the latter is the remarkable assortment of historical and antiquarian documents and manuscript volumes bequeathed by the late David Laing, especially rich in matter relating to Scotland; other curious MSS are the protest of the Bohemian nobles against the burning of John Huss; the original marriage contract of Queen Mary with the Dauphin of France; a vellum copy of Fordun's "Scotichronicon," and a variety of beautiful Persian and Abyssinian productions. The Library formerly enjoyed the right to claim a copy of every book entered at Stationers' Hall, but now receives instead an annual grant of £575. For the rest it is supported out of the general university fund. The Library Hall, 190 feet long by 50 wide, is one of the noblest rooms in Scotland, and is adorned by a large number of busts of old Professors of the University.

The Advocates' Library, by far the most valuable in Scotland, was founded by Sir George Mackenzie, in 1682. The collection of manuscripts numbers about 3,000 volumes, relating chiefly to the civil and ecclesiastical history of Scotland, most of which have been printed. In 1858 the library was estimated to contain 174,000, and is now (1888) computed to have increased to over 300,000 volumes. Thomas Ruddiman, the Latinist, and David Hume, the historian, were amongst its librarians. It is one of the five public libraries which still enjoy the privilege of receiving a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom. It is distinguished by the liberality of its management—every respectable applicant being freely permitted to consult its contents.

The Library of the Writers to the Signet.—The origin of the Signet Library dates from 1755, when the Society of Writers to her Majesty's Signet set aside certain funds for the purchase of law-books. In 177- they began to collect the best editions of books in other departments of literature, with a view of forming a general library, to which Mr. Archibald Campbell, of Succoth, presented a collection of the principal ancient classics. A catalogue, printed in 1792, shows the library then contained about 3,400 volumes. It now (1888) contains about 80,000 volumes, exclusive of pamphlets and tracts. The members of the society are permitted by the rules to borrow volumes from the library under certain restrictions, and even to extend this privilege to strangers whom they may recommend. The funds at the disposal of the society for maintaining the library are exclusively derived from the entrance fees of its members.

The Solicitors' Library.—The Library of the Solicitors before the Supreme Courts was formed about the beginning of the present century. It contains about 15,000 volumes. The primary purpose of the library is for professional use, and for consultation during the sitting of the superior courts. Almost every work bearing on the law of Scotland is included. The Advocates' Library, the Signet Library, and the Solicitors' Library are located in the Parliament House.

The Library of the Faculty of Actuaries is kept in the Standard Life Assurance Company's office, 3, George street. It was established in 1856. It contains, besides a large collection of pamphlets, 1,200 volumes exclusively professional and for reference. The library is maintained by an annual grant from the Faculty. The use and privilege of the library is given to all matriculated students of the Faculty of Actuaries and to the members of the Actuarial Society in Edinburgh.

The Edinburgh Literary Institute, South Clerk street, was opened in 1872. Its object was to provide reading for the inhabitants of the southern districts of the city. The library contains 8,000 volumes, and is supported by the annual subscriptions of the readers.

The Edinburgh Subscription Library, 25, George street, was instituted in 1794. Its object was to provide a good supply of general literature. It contains about 40,000 volumes, and is supported by shares and the annual subscriptions of its members.

The Edinburgh Mechanics' Subscription Library, Victoria terrace, was instituted in 1825, and its special object was to provide at a cheap rate an extensive collection of books in the general literature of the country, including the most popular works on science. It is maintained by a small entrance fee and an annual subscription from the members.

The Royal College of Physicians was incorporated by charter in 1681. The hall, which is in Queen street, contains a library of about 26,000 volumes and a museum of materia medica.

The Royal College of Surgeons was incorporated in 1778, and is possessed of a most valuable museum; the bequest of Dr. Barclay's, and the purchase of Mr. Bell's, in addition to what has been otherwise acquired, have rendered their collection of anatomical preparations perhaps unequal ed in Great Britain. The hall is in Nicolson street and is a noble edifice in the Grecian style, with a portico in front, supported by fluted Ionic columns. It was erected in 1833, at a cost of £20,000.

The Royal Medical Society, 7, Melbourne place, numbers about 80 members, but there are life members all over the world. The library contains 20,000 volumes, chiefly medical literature and allied sciences, for the use of members only.

The Philosophical Institution, Queen street, was originally established in 1832 as the Edinburgh Philosophical Association. It was reorganized in 1846 under its present constitution, embracing three separate departments, (1) the news room, (2) the library and reading room, and (3) popular lectures on subjects of general interest. The present newsroom was erected in 1851. The daily supply of newspapers includes all the more important London, provincial, foreign, and colonial journals. The library contains 30,000 volumes, including a valuable collection of books of reference. The institute is supported solely by the contributions of the members and subscribers, of whom there are about 3,400.

The Royal (Dick's) Veterinary College, Clyde-street, was founded by the late Professor Dick in 1823. Previous to that date, no institution devoted to the teaching of veterinary science existed in Scotland; nor was any veterinary degree obtainable in Great Britain or Ireland. In the year mentioned, the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, considering the desirability of promoting instruction in veterinary subjects, came to an agreement with Professor Dick, under which the present institution was founded. The undertaking was from the outset attended with marked success; the number of students rapidly increased, and in the year 1827 a Board of Examiners was appointed by the Highland and Agricultural Society. Students who, after a prescribed period of attendance at the College, were able to satisfy the examiners of their proficiency, received a certificate setting forth that they were qualified to practice the veterinary art. In the year 1844 the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons was incorporated by Royal Charter, and under the charter of incorporation Professor Dick's College was affiliated to it. From the year 1848 two separate and distinct examining boards existed, viz., 1st, that appointed, as formerly, by the Highland and Agricultural Society, conferring the veterinary certificate; the 2nd, that appointed by the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, granting the diploma of that body. The course of study requisite to obtain these degrees was in each case almost identical, and students could become candidates for either or both. Professor Dick constantly developed the resources of the College towards imparting a sound theoretical combined with an extensive practical knowledge, and his efforts were rewarded by the widespread fame of the institution. In 1866 Professor Dick died, having achieved more than any other single individual towards rescuing from obscurity the position of veterinary science in this country. At his death he endowed the Royal Veterinary College, which now bears his name; and bequeathed it in trust to the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the city of Edinburgh. It is the only endowed veterinary school in Great Britain. During Professor Dick's lifetime, and since his death, the College has educated upwards of 1,200 veterinary surgeons, and it numbers amongst its graduates those occupying the highest and most responsible positions in the profession both at home and abroad. An agreement was some years ago concluded between the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland and the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons under which the examinations hitherto held by the Society are discontinued; consequently, only one degree in veterinary medicine and surgery is now obtainable in Great Britain and Ireland, viz., the diploma of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. Candidates on obtaining the degree become members of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons.

The New Veterinary College, in Leith walk, has been erected specially for the education of veterinary students. It contains lecture, reading, and waiting rooms, &c., and is provided with horse boxes, dog kennels, &c.

The Royal Institution arose in 1819, and was incorporated in 1827 for the encouragement of the fine arts. The apartments of the institution are in a magnificent building, situated on the north end of the Mound, in Princes street. It is from a design by Playfair, and is of the Doric order, with fluted columns ranging on each side; in the front is a third range, supporting a pediment, on which is now placed a statue of the Queen, by Steell. The building, which was commenced in 1823, cost £40,000. It contains a sculpture gallery of casts, a school of art, the rooms of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, the Board of Manufactures, the Fishery Board, and the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, and also the museum and library of that sobiety, which latter contains about 9,000 volumes, chiefly relating to the archæology of Scotland. The museum is now the property of the nation, and very rich in objects of interest.

The National Gallery is immediately south of the Royal Institution, on the Mound; it was built in 1850-54, at a cost of £40,000, and is a building of the Ionic order, from a design by Mr. Playfair. There are two suites of octagonal rooms; the western contains the National Gallery of painting and sculpture, in which, besides specimens of the old masters, are some admirable works of more recent painters; the eastern is used for the annual exhibition of the Royal Scottish Academy, which is one of the great attractions of the city during the months of March, April, and May. In this building may be seen Flaxman's beautiful statue of Robert Burns.

The Society of Arts, which was incorporated in 1822, and has since obtained the royal charter, is very efficient in the encouragement of useful inventions, models of which are exhibited at its meetings. These are held once a fortnight in their hall, below the Assembly Rooms, George street.

The Royal Scottish Geographical Society, 80A, Princes street, was founded with the object of popularising and diffusing geographical knowledge in Scotland.

The Royal Botanic Garden and Arboretum of Edinburgh occupies a fine position on the north side of the town, and has its entrance from Inverleith row. The main entrance to the arboretum is at the west side, and can be approached by Stockbridge. This garden, of which the professor of botany in the University is regius keeper, is one of the oldest in the kingdom, having been founded in 1670. Since then it has undergone many changes, both as to situation and extent, to accommodate it to the requirements of the Edinburgh Botanical School, which is the largest in the kingdom. The garden embraces an area of 27 Scotch acres, and is especially adapted for the purposes of tuition. It includes a pinetum, a herbarium, and a winter garden, a special room provided with microscopes for the pursuit of histological botany, a class museum, and various ranges of hot houses and green houses. The palm house is 100 feet in length, 57 in breadth, and 72 feet in height. The class-room of the professor of botany, the museum, and the house of the curator are situated at the right hand side of the entrance. Admission is obtained to the garden free.

The Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland was instituted in 1784, and incorporated by royal charter in 1787, and originally bore the name of the Highland Society. The leading purposes of the society are to offer premiums for reports on almost every subject connected with the cultivation of the soil, the rearing and feeding of stock, the management of the dairy, the improvements of agricultural machinery and implements, the growth of timber, the extension of cottage accommodation, the application of chemical science, and the dissemination of veterinary information.

The Royal Observatory and Astronomical Institution.—After several ineffectual attempts to erect an observatory, the foundation stone was laid on the Calton Hill in 1776; and the money subscribed being insufficient, the work was completed in 1792 at the expense of the city. The Astronomical Institution was established in 1812, and the Town Council granted to the association the ground and building on the Calton Hill formerly destined for the purposes of an observatory, on the condition of their not being applied to any other purposes. The property was originally held in transferable shares, of twenty-five guineas each, but now entirely belongs to the Government. The Observatory is under the charge of the Professor of Astronomy in the University, who receives a salary from Government, and is Astronomer Royal of Scotland. A salary is also paid to an assistant. A regular series of observations is published yearly. The new Observatory, erected by the Astronomical Institution, from a design by Playfair, a little to the east of the former, was founded in 1818; it is a cross, each branch of which is 62 feet long, with four projecting pediments of 28 feet each, supported by six columns of the Doric order, fronting the four cardinal points of the compass. In the centre is a dome, thirteen feet in diameter, under which is a pillar of solid masonry, of a conical form, six feet in diameter at the base, and nineteen feet high, intended for the astronomical circle. Connected with the Observatory is a time ball, conspicuously elevated on a tall pole on the summit of the Calton Hill, which falls, in consequence of the action of electricity, exactly at one o'clock p.m. Greenwich time. A wire from the Observatory conveys the electric spark to the Castle, and at the same moment discharges a gun in one of the batteries daily, except on Sundays. The time-ball was in use for a number of years before the time-gun, which has now also been in use for several years. Both are highly prized in Edinburgh and in Leith.

The United Presbyterian College, Hall, and Library is situated in Castle terrace; the library contains upwards of 21,000 volumes.

Edinburgh has other societies too numerous to be properly noticed in our limited space, such as the Wernerian, the Diagnostic, the Dialectic, the Horticultural, the Hunterian, the Forensic, the Juridical, the Scots Law, the Speculative, the Phrenological, the Harveian, the Medico-Chirurgical, the Geological, the Obstetrical, the Literary, and the Metaphysical.

Theological College of the Scottish Episcopal Church.—This Institution had its origin in the pious benefaction of Catherine Panton, residing near Fraserburgh, in the county of Aberdeen, which was entrusted in the year 1810 to the Bishops of the Scottish Church, for the purpose of "erecting and endowing a seminary of learning, or theological institution, for the education of young men desirous to serve in the sacred ministry of the Scottish Episcopal Communion." In 1833 the Rev. Dr. Andrew Bell founded, in connection with the institution, the lectureship which bears his name. The valuable library of the Right Rev. Alexander Jolly, D.D., Bishop of Moray, was bequeathed to the institution in 1838, The library of the late Rev. G. H. Forbes has been placed by the Forbes Trustees in 8, Rosebery crescent, and is available to students applying to the Librarian, the Rev. Canon W. Bell. In consequence of a destructive fire at Trinity College, Glenalmond, in which the buildings occupied by the divinity students were burned to the ground, the theological classes were removed temporarily to Edinburgh in January, 1876; and in the following year the Bishops determined that the Theological College should be situated permanently in that city. The classes meet in the Theological Hall, 8 and 9, Rosebery crescent.

The Edinburgh School Board.—In consequence of the discontinuance under the Educational Commissioners' Scheme of the Heriot Free Schools, the Board have been compelled to provide school accommodation for the 4,000 children in average attendance at these schools who were affected by this change. The schools, twelve in number, have been under the control of the Board since the 1st January, 1886. The Heriot Trust retain the full power of electing children to the free list, and have at their disposal for that purpose £3,500, less £250, which may be set apart in giving food and clothing in the more necessitous cases. The number of schools now under the Board, exclusive of the High School, is twenty-seven, with a total teaching staff of 490. Several new schools have been built, whilst others have been enlarged, and when these are in full operation accommodation will be secured for over 20,000 children. The total amount for new school buildings for which the Board is responsible amounts to £242,840, and in addition £43,750 has been borrowed for alterations on existing buildings, &c., making together £286,590. The Board have recently erected new offices occupying a site to the south of the U. P. Synod Hall, at the corner of Castle terrace and Cornwall street. The building is designed in the Italian style, which expresses in a general way the predominating feeling of the architecture of the Synod Hall. The principal elevation is to Castle terrace, and on the street floor are placed the public office, lighted by the large oriel window, the treasurer's, clerks', and messengers' rooms, &c. The compulsory department enters from Cornwall street and embraces room for the chief compulsory officer, waiting-room, and large room for the compulsory staff. On the first floor, overlooking Castle terrace, is the boardroom, 33 feet by 23 feet, exclusive of the large oriel window, having, on the one side an ante-room, which may be used as a waiting-room, and, on the other, the room appropriated for the use of the clerk of the Board. Two committe-rooms face Cornwall street, and at the back of the building are two retiring-rooms and lavatories. On the second floor the rooms to the front are intended for the accommodation of maps, books, and school appliances. The messenger and caretaker's house is situated on this floor, and is entered by a separate door and stair in Cornwall street. The building has been designed by Mr. Robert Wilson, architect to the Board, and is estimated to have cost £10,000.

High School of Edinburgh, Regent Road.—The date of the foundation of this school is unknown, but it appears to have existed as early as the beginning of the twelfth century. From that time to the Reformation, "the Grammar School of Edinburgh," as it was then called, was under the control of the Canons of Holyrood. In 1598 it was remodelled on a more comprehensive plan, and from the patronage vouchsafed to it by James VI., it received the name of Schola Regia Edinburgensis. The course of study has since, from time to time, been extended and improved, so as to meet the advancing demands of the age. Although at first exclusively a classical seminary, it now furnishes systematic instruction in all the departments of a commercial as well as of a liberal education. The English language and literature, including reading, orthography, recitation, grammar, and composition, together with the history of Great Britain, form prominent parts of the system; while the entire curriculum of study—which occupies nine years—embraces the Latin, Greek, French, German, and Hindustani languages, history, geography, chemistry, and physiology, with writing, book-keeping, arithmetic, algebra, and geometry, drawing, fencing, gymnastics, swimming, and military drill. There is a library containing nearly 7,000 volumes selected by the rector and masters, to which all the pupils have access. The High School originally stood in the Old Town, near the site of the old infirmary. It was rebuilt on nearly the same spot in 1777. As this situation had become unsuitable, from the great extension of the city northwards, and as the accommodation had proved inadequate to the rapidly increasing number of pupils, the present splendid structure was founded in 1825, on the south slope of the Calton Hill, which was deemed more convenient for the inhabitants of the city. The edifice, which cost £30,000, and was designed by the late Thomas Hamilton, architect, was completed in 1829. The main building, 270 feet in length, has a magnificent hexastyle Doric portico in the centre, which is united to the wings by two corridors, the entablatures of which are supported by twelve columns, also of the Doric order. There is ample accommodation for conducting the various branches of study. The playground, a portion of which is roofed over, is spacious, extending to nearly two acres, and commands a picturesque view of the ancient city and surrounding country. The patrons are the Magistrates and Town Council of the city, and the school is under the management of the Edinburgh School Board.

George Heriot's Trust.—George Heriot was born at Edinburgh about the year 1563. He followed his father's trade of a goldsmith, and in 1597 was appointed goldsmith to Anne of Denmark, the queen of James VI. Shortly afterwards he was nominated jeweller and goldsmith to the king; and when the court was removed to London, in 1603, Heriot followed in its train. He died there February 12, 1624, having, by a will dated in the previous year, bequeathed the residue of his property, amounting to £23,625, to the erection of an hospital, "for the mainetenance, releife, bringing upp, and education of poore fatherlesse boyes, freemen's sonnes of the towne of Edinburgh." The foundation stone of George Heriot's Hospital, Lauriston, was laid July 1, 1628, but, owing to the civil war and other causes, the building was not opened till April 11, 1659. The expense of the erection exceeded £30,000 sterling. The original trustees of Heriot's endowment were the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council, and the City Ministers of Edinburgh; and by them and their successors in office the trust continued to be administered till August, 1885. At that date the Endowed Schools (Scotland) Commissioners issued a scheme by which the governing body was re-constituted, and the number of its members reduced from fifty-four to twenty-one, of whom twelve are appointed by the Town Council (one of these must be elected from among the ministers of religion officiating in Edinburgh, not being members of the Established Church of Scotland), three by the School Board of Edinburgh, two by the City Ministers of Edinburgh, two by the Senatus of the University of Edinburgh, one by the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and one by the Edinburgh Chamber of Commerce. Besides altering the composition and number of the governing body, the scheme also made considerable change in the mode of applying the income of the trust; and the main objects to which this is now to be devoted may be summarized as follow:—(1) The establishment of a day-school within the buildings of Heriot's Hospital, to be called George Heriot's Hospital School, and which shall be open to fee-paying as well as free pupils. (2) The maintenance and extension of the Watt Institution as a Technical College—to be known as the Heriot-Watt College—for "providing technical and general education for the industrial classes, of both sexes, on a scale suitable to the great and increasing wants of these classes." (3) The foundation of bursaries for the promotion of secondary and higher education, which are tenable at George Heriot's Hospital School, the High School, the Heriot-Watt College, and the University; and (4) the expenditure of an annual sum of not more than £3,500 for providing free education, books, &c., for poor children attending public or state-aided schools in Edinburgh. This provision for free education is intended to cover the cost of teaching at least as many poor children as had been, till 1885, under instruction in what were known as the Heriot Out-door Schools, which by the scheme were transferred to the management of the School Board.

THE EDINBURGH MERCHANT COMPANY SCHOOLS.—(1) The Edinburgh Educational Institution (Ladies' College), 70, 72, and 73, Queen street. This Institution was founded in 1695 by the Company of Merchants, and Mary Erskine, widow of James Hair, druggist in Edinburgh, as an hospital for girls, and was known as the Merchant Maiden Hospital. The governors were incorporated by an Act of Parliament in 1707. The original edifice was situated in Bristo street; but having become insufficient for its purpose, the foundation stone of an another building was laid in Lauriston in 1816; and the erection, which was designed by Mr. Burn, was completed in 1818, at the cost of £12,250. Up to 1870 this building continued to be used as an hospital, for the board and education of the foundationers, but in that year it was converted, under a provisional order into a day-school, and opened as such in September, 1870. It having been sold to the governors of George Watson's Hospital, the governors of this institution purchased extensive buildings in Queen street for the purposes of the institution, and they were opened in October, 1871. The institution provides a high-class education, the course of study embracing English, French, German, Latin, lectures on literature and science, writing, arithmetic, book-keeping, algebra, mathematics, drawing, vocal music, pianoforte, drill, calisthenics, dancing, gymnastics, needlework, and cookery. The governors had the right of presenting thirty-four foundationers to the hospital, but an amending provisional order, obtained in 1888, directs that this number be reduced to twenty, and that the governors shall also elect twenty-one foundationers by competitive examination from among the girls attending the day-schools of the Merchant Maiden Hospital. Power is given to increase the number of merit foundationers from time to time should the governors consider that the funds of the endowment warrant such increase. Girls attending the institution may obtain, by competition, the following benefits, viz., (1) A presentation to the foundation; and (2) a bursary on leaving the institution of £25 a year, and tenable for four years, equal to £100. Besides the above benefits, a large number of school bursaries is awarded at the end of each session, equal in value to the cost of the successful competitor's class fees for the following year. There are also awarded to pupils attending the institution bursaries in connection with the Edinburgh School of Cookery and Domestic Economy. The foundationers are, under the supervision of the governors, boarded with families in Edinburgh. When admitted to the foundation the girls must be of the age of nine and under that of sixteen years. A number of the presentations was formerly limited to the daughters or grand-daughters of such as were of the order or calling of merchant burgesses of Edinburgh, or ministers thereof, or suburbs of the same, or had been benefactors to the hospital or governors of the same; but the provisional order removes this limitation, and declares that the patrons shall be at full liberty to present such girls as they consider most suitable. On leaving, the foundationers, by favour, receive £9 6s. 8d. each.

(2) George Watson's College Schools, Lauriston.—George Watson, born in Edinburgh about 1650, served an apprenticeship to a merchant in the city, and after a short residence in Holland, entered into the service of Sir James Dicks, a wealthy trader in Edinburgh. This employment he relinquished in 1695, on being appointed accountant to the Bank of Scotland. He died in April, 1723, and by his will bequeathed £12,000 to endow an hospital for the maintenance and instruction of the male children and grandchildren of decayed merchants in Edinburgh; and by the statutes of his trustees a preference was given to the sons and grandsons of members of the Edinburgh Merchant Company. An hospital for the board and education of the foundationers was founded in the year 1738, and opened in June, 1741, and it continued to be used for this purpose until 1870, when the governors of the four hospitals connected with the Merchant Company, taking advantage of the powers given by the Endowed Institutions (Scotland) Act, applied for and obtained provisional orders empowering them to convert the hospitals into day schools, and they were opened as such in September, 1870. This building was, however, sold to the Corporation of the Royal Infirmary in 1871, and the building formerly called the Merchant Maiden Hospital was acquired for and is now being occupied as George Watson's College for Boys. Another house adjoining has since been purchased for the extension of the schools. The object of the schools is to provide boys with a liberal education, qualifying them for commercial or professional life, the civil service, the universities, &c. The provisional order directs that the number of foundationers shall be reduced to sixty, and under the amending order of 1888 at least one-fourth of these shall be elected by competitive examination from boys attending this and the other Merchant Company Schools. Boys attending the College may obtain, by competition, the following benefits, viz.: (1) A presentation to one of the foundations of this College; and (2) a bursary on leaving the schools of £25 a year, and tenable for four years, equal to £100. Besides the above benefits, a large number of school bursaries is awarded at the end of each session, equal in value to the cost of the successful competitor's class-fees for the following year. Under the order of 1888, the governors have power to found three open fellowships of the value of £100 per annum, tenable for any period not exceeding three years, to aid students of promise and merit in the prosecution of their professional studies in any department of science, art, or literature, whether in this country or abroad, and who have attended at least two sessions at Edinburgh University, and such fellowships shall be granted upon a competitive examination. The foundationers are, under the supervision of the governors, boarded in families in Edinburgh. When admitted as foundationers, they must be of the age of nine and under that of fourteen years. On leaving, each foundationer, by favour, is allowed £7 for clothes; he may receive for five years of an apprenticeship £10 annually; and on attaining the age of twenty-five, a further sum of £50 to enable him to commence business in Edinburgh.

(3) George Watson's College for Ladies.—The governors have also, in virtue of power given them in the provisional order of 1870, established a school for girls called George Watson's College for Ladies. The school buildings were in 1876 largely added to and improved by the governors, so as to make them more commodious, and in every respect suitable as a young ladies' institution. The course of study is the same as that of the Edinburgh Educational Institution Ladies' College (see before), and girls attending the school have, under an amending order obtained in 1888, similar benefits open for their competition.

(4) Daniel Stewart's College for Boys, Dean.—Daniel Stewart, of the Exchequer, who died in 1814, left the residue of his property, amounting (after the erection and endowment of a free school in his native parish of Logierait) to upwards of £13,000, to accumulate for the purpose of building and endowing an hospital for the maintenance and education of boys, the children of honest and industrious parents, whose circumstances in life do not enable them suitably to support and educate their children at other schools. Taking advantage of the power given by a provisional order obtained in 1870, the hospital was opened as a day school in September of that year. The institution provides boys with a superior education, and the course of study is similar to that in George Watson's College for Boys. Instruction is also given in technical education. The provisional order directs that the number of foundationers shall be reduced to forty, and under the amending order of 1888 at least one-half of them shall be elected, by competitive examination, from the day scholars of this institution. Boys attending the institution have valuable benefits open for their competition. On admission to the foundation boys must be of the age of nine and under that of fourteen years.

(5) James Gillespie's Schools for Boys and Girls, Bruntsfield Links.—This institution was founded by James Gillespie, of Spylaw, merchant and tobacconist in Edinburgh, who, by his will, dated in the year 1796, bequeathed the greater part of his property for the endowment of a charitable school, and of an hospital for the aliment and maintenance of old men and women. The edifice, which was designed by Mr. Burn, was founded in 1801, and opened in 1802. The free school was founded in 1801, and opened in 1803. Up to 1870, the hospital continued to be occupied by old persons, of whom about 40 were maintained in it. In that year the governors obtained a provisional order empowering them to convert the hospital into day schools, and it was opened as such in September, 1870. The schools are established as primary schools, and the course of instruction includes English, in all the branches, writing, arithmetic, book-keeping, algebra, geometry, elementary French and Latin, physical geography, freehand, model, and mechanical drawing, vocal music, and drill. The girls are also taught sewing, knitting cutting-out, the sewing-machine, and domestic economy. Arrangements have been made by which the senior girls may obtain practical lessons in cookery. Under an amending order, obtained in 1888, power is continued to the governors to grant forty school bursaries at the end of each session, equal in value to the cost of the successful competitor's class fees for the following year; and a new power is conferred on the governors, viz.: to establish twelve higher school bursaries of a value not exceeding £10 each per annum tenable for a period not exceeding three years, to enable promising pupils to attend at the higher class schools of the Company; such pupils receiving in addition free education at these schools. Those entitled to the benefits of the hospital as aged foundationers are persons not under 55 years of age, first, of the name of Gillespie, whatever part of Scotland they may come from: and, second, pe sons belonging to Edinburgh and its suburbs; failing the e, persons from Leith, Newhaven, and other parts of Midlothian; whom failing, persons from any other part of Scotland. By the provisional order of 1870 the governors have power, instead of maintaining the foundationers in the then present or any other building, to allow them a pension of not less than £10 and not exceeding £25 a year.

Donaldson's Hospital, Coltbridge.—This hospital was founded by James Donaldson, of Broughton Hall, printer, who died in Edinburgh in October, 1830, bequeathing the greater part of his property, amounting to about £200,000, to trustees, for the endowment and erection of an hospital for the maintenance of poor boys and girls, after the plan of the Orphan Hospital in Edinburgh, and John Watson's Institution. The building can accommodate 150 boys and 150 girls; it contains at present 217 children (118 boys and 99 girls), of whom 113 (56 boys and 57 girls) are deaf and dumb. Those eligible for admission are declared to be—1st, "Poor children of the name of Donaldson or Marshall, if appearing to the governors to be deserving;" 2nd, "such poor children as shall appear to be in the most destitute circumstances and the most deserving of admission." None are received whose parents are able to support them. The children are clothed and maintained in the hospital, and taught such useful branches of a plain English education as will fit the boys for trades and the girls for domestic service. The age of admission is from seven to nine, and that of leaving the hospital fourteen years. The building, which occupies a commanding position at the west end of the city, is a large and beautiful quadrangular structure, in the Elizabethan style, from a design by the late W. H. Playfair.

John Watson's Institution, Dean.—In the year 1759, John Watson, writer to the signet, bequeathed the residue of his estate to certain trustees, by them to be applied "to such pious and charitable uses within the city of Edinburgh as they shall think proper." In the year 1822 an Act of Parliament was obtained empowering the trustees to establish and endow "an hospital for the maintenance and education therein of destitute children, and bringing them up to be useful members of society; and also for assisting in their outset in life such of them as may be thought to deserve and require such aid." The edifice, which was designed by Mr. William Burn, was founded in 1825, and completed in 1828. About 100 are maintained in it, who must be fatherless and children of the better classes, such as clergymen, officers in the army and navy, legal or medical practitioners, and such like; when admitted, they must have completed their seventh year, but be under the age of nine. They are not retained after the age of fourteen. They are instructed in English, Latin, French, drawing, mathematics, vocal and instrumental music, dancing, drill, &c. The establishment is under the management of fifteen directors—the keeper and deputy keeper of the signet, the treasurer of the institution, and twelve commissioners of the writers to the signet. The fund, which in 1781 amounted to no less than £5,000, has been largely increased by the care and attention of the trustees.

The Fettes College and Endowment are due to the beneficent bequests of the late Sir William Fettes, Bart., of Comely Bank, who was born in 1750, and died in 1836. For the purposes of the endowment, a building called "The Fettes College" has been erected on the grounds of Comely Bank, part of the trust property, according to plans by the late David Bryce, Esq., R.S.A., architect, and was opened in October, 1870. The administration of the endowment is now in the hands of the governors of the Fettes Trust, acting under the scheme of the Educational Endowment (Scotland) Commission, dated April 3rd, 1886. At present fifty foundationers (children of parents who are from innocent misfortune, during their own lives, unable to give suitable education to their children, or who have died without leaving sufficient funds for that purpose) are maintained and educated at the college free of charge. Vacancies are filled up by the governors once a year. Non-foundationers are received as at other public schools, and for their accommodation there are four boarding-houses, which are situated within the college grounds, and under the charge of the college masters. The instruction includes all the branches of a liberal education of the highest class, and is intended to qualify for the universities and for professional life.

John Watt's Hospital, Leith.—The late John Watt, merchant in Leith, by his trust disposition and settlement, dated 1827, bequeathed the residue of his means and estate to trustees, with directions for the erection of an hospital in Leith, to be called "John Watt's Hospital." It is for the reception and maintenance of men and women of fifty-five years of age and upwards who are in destitute circumstances, but who are not pensioners or in receipt of an allowance from any charitable institution except the Parochial Board of South Leith. The following is the order of priority:—1st. Persons of the name of Watt; 2nd, natives of the Parish of South Leith of whatever name; 3rd, persons of whatever name who have constantly resided in the parish of South Leith for at least ten years preceding their admission; and 4th, natives of, or persons who have constantly resided in, the city of Edinburgh, or county of Midlothian. The Hospital stands at the south-west corner of the Links, and was opened in the beginning of 1862.

Cauvin's Hospital, Duddingston.—This institution was founded by Louis Cauvin, teacher of French in Edinburgh, and afterwards farmer at Duddingston, who died in 1825, bequeathing his property for the erection and endowment of "an hospital for the relief, maintenance, and education of the sons of respectable but poor teachers, the sons of poor but honest farmers, whom failing, the sons of respectable master printers or book sellers, and the sons of respectable servants in the agricultural line." This settlement was explained and modified, and the governors incorporated, by a Parliamentary statute in 1827. The management is in the survivors of certain individuals nominated by the founder, and others assumed by them, and in the following ex-officio trustees, viz., the Lord Provost of the city, the Principal of the University, the Rector of the High School, the Minister of Duddingston, Liberton, and Newton, the proprietor of the estate of Niddrie, and the factor of the Duke of Abercorn. The institution, which is situated at Duddingston, was opened in 1833 and the number of boys at present maintained there is nineteen. They are required, when admitted, to be of the age of seven and not more than nine years, and are retained for six years. They are taught the ordinary branches of education, and Latin, Greek, French, German, and mathematics.

The Maiden Hospital, Meadows.—This institution was founded in 1704, by the Freemen of the Incorporated Trades, aided by Mary Erskine, widow of James Hair, druggist. The governors were incorporated by statute in 1707. The management is vested in the deacons of the thirteen incorporations, two tradescouncillors, two persons of the name of Erskine, the preses of the Society of Barbers, and nine persons elected by the other governors, in all twenty-seven. Forty-nine girls are maintained in the institution. Those eligible for admission under presentations held by the Trades Incorporations or the Society of Barbers of the city of Edinburgh are the daughters, granddaughters, or great-granddaughters of freemen or craftsmen, whom failing, any girl qualified by age and otherwise presented by the holder of the presentation. They are required, when admitted, to be of the age of seven and under that of eleven years, and are not retained above the age of seventeen. They are instructed in the English language and grammar, in French and music, in writing, arithmetic, geography, history, sewing, and laundry work. On leaving, each girl receives £10 and a Bible.

The Edinburgh Academy, Henderson row, was established in 1824, and incorporated by royal charter from George IV. It is a handsome building, after a design by Mr. Burn, and cost £16,000. The Academy is under the superintendence of a board of fifteen directors, three of whom are elected annually from the body of shareholders. It consists of two departments, a preparatory and upper school. The former, which was opened for the first time in October, 1888, takes boys from five or six to nine or ten; and the latter continues their education till eighteen or nineteen. The upper school is divided into two parts—a classical school and a modern school. In the former, the boys are taught classics, from the rudiments in the first class to the most advanced Latin and Greek authors in the seventh. Throughout the school, attention is paid to the writing of essays, and from the fourth class upwards to the study of classical English authors. French is taught in every class, and German to the modern school, and to the fifth, sixth, and seventh classes. The course prepares boys for the universities in England and Scotland, for business life, for Sandhurst, Woolwich, and for the Indian Civil Service. In the modern school boys who ultimately choose this school for the first three classes are not marked off from the class to which they belong, except in one subject. They are not required to learn Greek in the third class, but may substitute any other subject in which they wish special instruction. All the upper school is under the inspection of the Education Department, and on the reports of the examiners, together with those of the rector and the masters, the removal of boys from a lower to a higher class is dependent.

Edinburgh is famed for the number and excellence of its educational institutions. The Industrial or Ragged Schools, of which the first was instituted in 1855, and which provide food as well as education, are a great boon to the children of the most wretched classes, and have saved very many from growing up in ignorance and vice, fitting them for respectable and useful places in society. Numerous Sunday schools are in beneficial operation. Many private academies and schools of a superior grade are conducted upon the best plans of instruction, and will be found noticed at the end of the Trades' List in the Directory. The Normal Schools of the Established Church and Free Church are extremely efficient and useful. They have contributed much to raise the average standard of attainments among teachers in Scotland.

The Orphan Hospital, Dean.—This institution was projected in 1727, by Andrew Gairdner, merchant in Edinburgh; and in 1733 a house was hired, and thirty children received in it. In 1735 an edifice was erected near the Trinity College Church; but by the increase of the city this situation being rendered unhealthy, the present building was erected in 1833, from the designs of the late Mr. Thomas Hamilton. The revenue is derived from voluntary contributions and legacies; in addition to the interest on accumulated donations since its foundation. About 120 boys and girls, including presentees and boarders, are maintained in the institution, the benefits of which are not confined to any district of Scotland. When admitted, they must be of the age of seven and not above ten years; they receive the benefit of a thoroughly good education; suitable to their station in life, a godly bringing up, and a comfortable home. Boarders from any part of Scotland are now received into the Hospital at £16 per annum for boys, and £14 per annum for girls, which includes all expenses of whatever kind.

Trinity Hospital, the oldest charitable institution in the city, was founded by Mary of Gueldres, in the year 1461, for the reception of thirteen poor persons. The building was demolished in 1846, along with Trinity College Church, to make way for the North British Railway, and the funds were distributed in outdoor relief. By interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Session, of 3rd February, 1880, a new scheme was authorized for the distribution of this charity. The number of pensioners, of whom one-eighth are incurables on the higher scale of pension of £25, has been fixed at 60, of whom 22 are appointed by private patrons, and on the lower scale of pension of £15 at 100. Applicants for the benefit of this fund require to have resided in Edinburgh for two years at some time, and supported themselves by their own industry during that period, without aid from any charity, or be widows or children of burgesses, and must be in decayed circumstances at the date of their application, and not under 50 years of age, except where they are prevented from working by incurable disease, in which case there is no limit in point of age.

Alexander Fund.—Formerly this fund was administered by the Governors of the Trinity Hospital, in conjunction with the Trinity Hospital Fund proper, but by interlocutor of the Lords of Council and Session, of 3rd February, 1880, the management has been vested in a body of trustees, and a scheme adopted by the court for its future administration. Under this scheme the free income is to be divided amongst twelve beneficiaries, eight men and four women, with a maximum pension of £27 15s. 6d. In the event of the free income of the fund being more than sufficient to provide for these, the trustees have power to appoint additional pensioners, and they have discretionary powers as to the amount of such pensions. Applicants for the fund must be unmarried when elected, and not under 50 years of age, excepting any additional beneficiaries whom the trustees may appoint, in the selection of whom there shall be no restriction of sex or marriage. The beneficiaries shall be indigent persons of good reputation who have not fallen into decay through their own vice and prodigality, and who are not in receipt of parochial relief. First, Those of the kindred of Mr. Alexander, of Knockhill, who died in 1696, either upon his father's or his mother's side; Secondly, those of the surname of Alexander, who shall apply within three-score days next after any vacancy shall be publicly announced; and Thirdly, other persons qualified as aforesaid as the patrons shall think fit. All persons bearing the name of Alexander, whether as their parents' name or their husbands' name, shall be deemed to fall within the favouring clause of the bequest. Applicants not claiming on the footing of being entitled to a preference must have resided in Edinburgh for two years, and for that period must have supported themselves by their own industry, or at least without aid from any charity.

The Royal Blind Asylum and School was formed by the amalgamation of the Asylum for the Industrious Blind and the School for Blind Children at one time located in Gayfield square. The idea of this ancient institution was first communicated by Dr. Blacklock to Mr. Miller, who were both blind from their infancy, but it was chiefly through the active and benevolent exertions of Dr. David Johnstone, minister of North Leith, aided by a subscription of £20 at the commencement from the celebrated Wilberforce, that the institution was founded in 1793. In 1836 the school for blind children was founded by Mr. James Gall, and was opened with only one pupil. Mr. Gall was himself a printer, and having seen some of Abbey Hauy's books in Paris, he determined to give the Bible to the Scotch blind in raised type. Her Majesty, in 1853, by a donation of 260 guineas, set an example which has been followed by a few since, which secured the perpetual right to nominate one pupil. In 1876 the school premises in Gayfield square, and those for females in Nicolson street, being found too small, the directors secured four acres of ground at West Craigmillar, a lovely southern suburb, and opened the building now occupied as school and home. The educational appliances are of the first order, and, notwithstanding great scarcity of funds, the directors do not seem to have spared expense in supplying the essential apparatus for the training of blind children in music, &c. Books in Braille type are printed on the premises. In 1806 property was bought in Nicolson street for £1,575 for the male department, and in 1822 other property, in the same street, for £2,200, as a home for the female blind. The lower part of these buildings is advantageously laid out in shops, while the upper part is retained as a barracks for the young men connected with the institution. These establishments are fitted up with every comfort and accommodation for the inmates, who now number 247 in all—49 adult females, 156 adult males, and 42 boys and girls. In the industrial department the females are employed in sewing the covers for mattresses and feather beds, knitting stockings, &c. The males are chiefly employed in making mattresses, brushes, baskets, mats, ship fenders, &c., and in the weaving of sacking, matting, and "rag carpets," no less than 18 looms being employed in this work. The sales of the above kinds of work for 1887 amounted to £18,571. The Nicolson street buildings have recently undergone extensive alterations, at a cost of about £3,500, an elegant new façade, surmounted by stone-faced dormer windows, and a handsome cornice having been added, with a large centre doorway, and on either side two spacious windows, separated by stone pillars, surmounting the royal arms. In a niche above the windows is the late Handyside Ritchie's bust of Dr. Johnstone, the founder. The governing body consists of the Earl of Haddington, president; four vice-presidents, and twenty-four directors, chosen at the annual meeting of subscribers of half a guinea and upwards. The endowments amount to £10,000, but a debt of £25,000 hangs heavily on the institution.

The Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, established in 1810, is a large plain structure, situated in Henderson row. The expense of the building, furnishing, &c., was upwards of £7,000. Her Majesty is the patroness, and the Duke of Buccleuch, the president.

The Magdalen Asylum was originally instituted in 1797. The building, plain and commodious, is situated in Canongate, and will accommodate from fifty to sixty penitents. This charity is supported by contributions, bequests, and the profits arising from the work of the inmates.

There is also an institution known as the Girls' House of Refuge, or Western Reformatory, at Dalry, in the western suburbs; and another, called the Edinburgh Industrial Home for Fallen Women, at Alnwick Hill, near Liberton.

The Ministers' Widows' Fund.—This meritorious scheme, originated in 1743, received the sanction of Parliament in 1744, and was established on its present footing by Acts passed in 1778 and 1814. By the latter act it was provided that an addition of 20 per cent. on the former rates should be imposed; that every person in future admitted to the benefice for the first time, or to an office in a university, should pay a contribution or entry money of £10. A grant was made of the stipends of the vacant parishes. The four annual rates, to one of which every minister or professor is subject are £3 3s., £4 14s. 6d., £6 6s., and £7 17s. 6d. The widow is entitled to an annuity, corresponding to the rate her husband had chosen; and the children, if he leaves no widow, to provisions of £100, £150, £200, or £250, according to the rate the father may have paid. Similar schemes have been formed by the Society of Writers to the Signet, by the parochial schoolmasters of Scotland, and by the dissenting clergymen; but this scheme is particularly interesting as having been the first of its kind.

Horn's Charity distributes the interest of £3,500 to day labourers out of employment at Christmas, &c.

Dr. Robert Johnston's Bequest of £3,000 is equally appropriated in finding employment for the poor, in clothing the boys in Heriot's Hospital, and in support of poor exhibitioners at the University.

The income of Mr. Strathan's Estate is bestowed in small annual sums on poor old people not under 65 years of age, and on orphans not above twelve.

Scougall's Bequest.—John Scougall, a merchant in Leith, bequethed £2,000, the interest to be paid to daughters of merchants (not shopkeepers) in Leith. They must be Episcopalians, but whom failing, members of the Established Church. The beneficiaries are nominated by the clergymen of St. James's.

The Charity Workhouse, which is situated in the southern district, was erected by voluntary contributions in 1743. The principal funds for the support of this institution are a tax on the valued rents of the city, collections at the church doors, charitable donations and contributions. The average number of its inmates is upwards of 700. There is also another workhouse in the parish of St. Cuthbert, which was opened in 1762, and is conducted nearly on the same plan as the former.

The House of Refuge, in Canongate, is for the reception of all persons in a state of destitution.

The New Royal Infirmary, Lauriston place, the foundation stone of which was laid in 1870, was opened by Lord Provost Boyd, in October, 1879, and is considered to be the finest building of the kind in the world; the cost of its erection was £350,000.

The Royal Public Dispensary, in Richmond street, was founded in 1776, by the late Dr. Andrew Duncan, and is liberally conducted, but still too limited in its scale for a population so large as that of Edinburgh; consequently several others have arisen in different localities; including those exclusively for the eye and the ear.

The New Town Dispensary, in Thistle street, was instituted in 1815, and is supported by subscriptions.

Chalmers's Hospital, in Lauriston place, was opened in 1864. It was erected, and is maintained, by funds bequeathed by George Chalmers, plumber in Edinburgh, "for the sick and hurt." The management of the charity is in the Dean and Faculty of Advocates. There are many other charities for the relief of the afflicted poor, which will be found noticed, with their locality, in the list of public charities and institutions, as well as those for religious objects.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT, EXHIBITIONS, MARKETS, &c.

The Theatre Royal, on the site of the old Adelphi Theatre, which was burned down in 1853, stands at the head of Broughton street and Leith walk. The Royal Lyceum Theatre is in Grindlay street, the Royal Princess's in Nicolson street, and Moss's Theatre of Varieties in Chambers street. The Assembly Rooms are in George street, and were erected in 1787; they form part of a plain building, ornamented by a portico and pillars. The Hopetoun Rooms, in Queen street, are also appropriated to balls and concerts. Exclusive of the balls here, many others, as well as concerts, take place, during the season, under distinguished patronage. The national game of golf has several clubs to promote its practice. There are curling and skating clubs also, and a royal company of archers; the latter had the honour of being the king's body-guard during the visit of George IV., and more recently to her Majesty Queen Victoria, on her return visit from Balmoral in 1859, and were again present when her Majesty unveiled the statue erected in memory of the Prince Consort, in 1876.

MARKETS.—The Poultry, Meat, and Fish Markets are built on the rising ground at the south end of the North bridge, and are approached either from Market street, Cockburn street, or the North bridge. The Waverley Market, in Princes street, is the only market in the city for the sale of fruit and vegetables. The market days are Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Public meetings, concerts, &c., are held in this market. There are also markets at Stockbridge, and in Broughton street for the convenience of those vicinities, and likewise a corn market and one for cattle—the former in and the latter contiguous to the Grassmarket. The New Corn Exchange, in the Grassmarket, was erected in 1849, from a design by Mr. Cousin. It has a facade in the Italian style, but chiefly consists of a structure of iron and glass, 150 feet long and 98 feet broad.

CEMETERIES.—The Edinburgh cemetries are all tastefully laid out with walks and flowers, and are worthy of a visit. On the south is the cemetery of the Grange, on the west that of Dalry, on the north-west that of Dean, on the north that of Warriston, and on the north-east that of Rosebank. Many of the most celebrated persons who have died in Edinburgh for the last thirty years are interred in these cemeteries.

POPULATION.

The parliamentary burgh of Edinburgh, which consists of the entire parishes of Greenside, High, Lady Yester, New Greyfriars, New North, Old, Old Greyfriars, St. Andrew, St George, St. John, St Mary, St. Stephen, Tolbooth, Trinity College, and Tron, and parts of Canongate, Duddingston, Liberton, NorthLeith, St. Cuthbert, and of South Leith, contained in 1871 a population of 196,970 and in 1881, 228,190; showing an increase in the ten years of 31,220.

The royal burgh comprises the following parishes, viz.: Greenside, High, Lady Yester, New Greyfriars, New North, Old Greyfriars, St. Andrew, St. George, St. John, St. Mary, St. Stephen, Tolbooth, Trinity College, and Tron.

A FEW PLACES OF ATTRACTION IN THE ENVIRONS OF THE CITY.

Arthur's Seat, on the east of the city, rises to the height of 822 feet above the sea, with a conical summit, abrupt to the west, where is a range of precipice facing the city, called the Salisbury Crags. From its summit twelve counties are visible. To the north are the ruins of St. Anthony's Chapel and Hermitage, and near the foot is St. Anthony's well; west of Salisbury Crags is the lower hill of Saint Leonard, where existed in former days a religious establishment and a cemetery. The whole of this region is romantically grand, and derives additional interest from its being the locality of many interesting scenes in "The Heart of Mid lothian." The Queen's Drive, a carriage way made in 1844-47, winds round Arthur's Seat, and ascends to such a height as to afford a magnificent view. Arthur's Seat, is included in the Queen's Park, and Holyrood Palace is very near the base of Salisbury Crags. At the opposite or south-western extremity of the park is the village of Duddingston, with its loch, much frequented by anglers in summer, and a very gay scene in winter during frosts, when skaters and others resort to it to enjoy themselves on the ice.

Bruntsfield Links are extensive open grounds situated on the road to Morningside, and are well adapted for the recreation of the citizens and for bleaching grounds; here the national game of golf is often played. A Roman Catholic Nunnery, the Convent of St. Margaret, was erected here in 1834. To the east of this common are the Meadows, the property of the city, extending almost to Newington. This tract of level ground, adorned with many trees, is about three-quarters of a mile in length, and a little less than a quarter of a mile in breadth, and it resembles rather one of the rich verdant fields of the Netherlands than a park in the northern kingdom. The walks are kept in a state of praiseworthy neatness, and no carriages or horses are permitted except in a road which crosses the Meadows through an avenue of trees and in the Melville Drive, which passes along the whole length of the southern side.

Saint Bernard's Well is a medicinal spring near Stockbridge, on the Water of Leith. The water is sulphurous. Lord Gardenstone purchased the property and erected over the well a small Doric temple, with a circle of columns supporting a dome, and having in the centre a figure of Hygeia, the goddess of health. At one time this spring was much visited in the morning by citizens who had complaints, real or imaginary, which the fancied virtues of Saint Bernard's waters would remove; but now Stockbridge and its spring are surrounded by streets, and its rural attractions having disappeared, the medicinal ones of the well have become all but neglected.

RESTALRIG, or Restalric, is about a mile east of the Old Town, between the sea shore and Holyrood House. It was formerly an independent parish, with a collegiate church, the fragments of which are still remaining. The burial ground was formerly much used by the Episcopalians. Close to Restalrig are the spacious Piershill Barracks for cavalry, enclosing a large parade ground.

LEITH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES MENTIONED WITH EDINBURGH.

LEITH, the seaport of Edinburgh, a parliamentary burgh, and a coast guard station, is situated on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, at the mouth of the Water of Leith, a stream which rises in the Pentland Hills, and flows through the north of Edinburgh. It is distant from the Royal Exchange of Edinburgh rather more than one mile and a half. The road between Edinburgh and Leith is called Leith Walk, and is a noble street, busy with incessant traffic. The original name of this town was Inverleith, which signifies the mouth of the Leith; and though it is indebted to its proximity to Edinburgh for its commercial prosperity, it has often suffered greatly from being involved in the fate of that city, and also from the jealousy of its inhabitants. In 1485, the magistrates of Edinburgh ordained that no merchant of the city should take an inhabitant of Leith into partnership, and that none of the revenues of Edinburgh should be farmed by an inhabitant of Leith. The first great disaster which befell this rising town was its seizure and burning by the Earl of Hertford, in 1554. Three years afterwards Leith was again visited and injured by the same general, and in the year 1549, it became involved in almost every transaction of importance during the regency of Mary of Lorraine, in her efforts to oppose the Reformation, and sustained the horrors of a portracted siege, a garrison of French troops holding it in the interest of the Regent, while it was assailed by the Reformers and their English auxiliaries. Mary Queen of Scots mortgaged the superiority of Leith to Edinburgh, redeemable for one thousand merks, with reversion in favour of Bothwell, upon which the citizens of Edinburgh marched to Leith, and by taking possession of it, destroyed its independence. In 1643, the Solemn League and Covenant was signed at Leith, and the inhabitants have ever evinced the sincerity of their attachment to it In 1650, Lambert, the parliamentary general, took possession of the town, and when Monk became commander-in-chief, he resided for some time in it, and by order of Cromwell the citadel was repaired and greatly strengthened. During General Monk's residence he induced a number of English to reside here, who infused a spirit of mercantile adventure into the inhabitants. In 1715, Leith port, which was called a citadel, was seized by the Jacobites, who after holding it a short time, and plundering the Custom House, hurriedly evacuated it during the night. This fortress was situated about a quarter of a mile to the west of the Custom House, and there only remains of it now the arched gateway. Towards the close of the last century the celebrated Paul Jones threatened it, but a sudden storm coming on, the buccaneer was obliged to make a precipitate retreat. The subsequent history being involved with that of Edinburgh, our readers are referred to our history of that city for the details. In 1838 Leith was separated from Edinburgh, to which it had been sold in 1567, and the common goods, customs, rates, &c., were vested in the provost and magistrates of the town, with the exception of the revenues arising from the harbour and dock dues. The magistrates of Leith have the power of admiralty over Leith to a certain extent. Leith is irregularly built, and most of the older streets are crooked and narrow. There were ten wards of police, each of which formerly had two commissioners, chosen by the inhabitants; but the commission is now vested in the Town Council, who have the charge of watching, lighting, and cleansing the town. The town is divided by the river, which is crossed by a stone bridge and three drawbridges, into two parts, called North Leith and South Leith. The Water of Leith has long been very filthy, from public works throwing their refuse into it, and from its receiving the sewage of part of Edinburgh and of Leith itself. The effect has been prejudicial to the health of the town. A great scheme of drainage under an Act of Parliament was obtained in 1864, for the conveyance of the sewage by pipes into the sea to the eastward of the east pier. The opening of the main pipe is far out from the shore, at the Black Rocks. An improvement scheme has been provided for Leith at considerable cost, by which it is proposed to make a new street from Great Junction street to Tolbooth wynd, getting out the ruinous tenements lying in the oldest part of the town. The old buildings have been removed, and the scheme is gradually being carried out. Leith was created a parliamentary burgh in 1832, and in conjunction with Musselburgh and Portobello sends one representative to the Imperial Parliament; the gentleman first returned under the Reform Act was J. A. Murray, Esq., the then Lord Advocate; the present member is R. C. Munro-Ferguson, Esq. It is governed by a provost and four bailies, and eleven councillors, and has a sheriff substitute court.

DOCKS, TRADE, PUBLIC BUILDINGS, &c.

The tidal harbour of Leith has been frequently improved; it now admits vessels of 2,000 tons burthen. In 1799 the magistrates obtained an act authorising them to borrow £160,000 to execute part of a range of docks, designed by John Rennie, Esq., civil engineer. The eastern wet dock was begun in 1810, and finished in 1817. The cost of the whole was £285,108, exclusive of £8,000 for building a bridge over the Water of Leith. The Victoria Dock lies immediately to the north of Rennie's eastern wet dock. It was built by the late James M. Rendel, Esq., C.E., and was opened over thirty-five years ago. It is 700 feet long by 300 feet broad, and therefore contains about five English acres. Its entrance is 60 feet wide and 24 feet deep at high water, or 6 feet deeper than that of the old dock built by Rennie. Vessels drawing 22 feet are frequently admitted into the Victoria Dock. On the western side of the Victoria Dock is a twenty-ton steam crane, which is extensively used for shipping coals, &c. By an Act of Parliament, passed in 1826, the debt of the docks was reduced to £265,000, lent by Government to Edinburgh at the rate of three per cent., to be redeemed by a sinking fund formed by a deposit of one per cent. for twelve years, and two per cent. afterwards till the debt is extinguished, after which the docks revert to the city of Edinburgh. Government also agreed to expend £19,000 for the extension of the western pier, and the city £2,800 on the eastern. In 1847 an Act was obtained for the construction of additional docks, and the extension of the pier, Government granting £135,000 for the purpose. There are six graving docks—one of large dimensions, called the Prince of Wales Dock, opened 2nd February, 1863. The dock is 400 feet long, 80 wide, and 24 deep at spring tides; so that it is capable of receiving for repair a first-class ship of war, or two very heavy trading steamers. Instead of a pair of gates, the dock is opened and closed by floating or sinking an iron caisson. In the beginning of the year 1863, the Leith Dock Commissioners obtained from the Government Public Works Loan Commissioners a grant of £223,000 for the construction of new works. These works include a great reclamation embankment on the east sands; a wet dock nearly eleven acres in extent, with an entrance basin of about two acres, and a lock of 350 feet by 60 feet. The plans were prepared by Mr. Rendel and Mr. Robertson. The new dock is immediately east of the present graving dock, and connected with the harbour by a lock opening from the entrance baisin. The embankment is about 3,500 feet long, enclosing 36 acres. The dock is 1,000 feet long and 450 feet wide. It has 28½ feet of water at high-water spring tides. The coping is 6½ feet above high water. The breadth of quay all round the dock is about 200 feet, affording room both for road and railway, with every facility for the entrance of vessels at any period of the tide. The Edinburgh Dock, which was commenced in 1874, and was opened by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh in July, 1881, consists of a centre basin 500 feet long and 650 feet wide, and two basins 1,000 feet long and 200 feet wide, separated by a jetty having a width of 250 feet. The total amount of masonry in the wet dock is 100,000 cubic yards. The north and south quays are each 1,500 feet long, and the two sides of the jetty 1,000 feet long each, having a total quayage in connection with the dock of 6,775 feet. The walls are fifteen feet thick at the base, narrowing in two tiers to eight feet. The new dock cost altogether about £300,000. Leith now possesses five docks and a total quayage of three miles 808 yards, 1,234 yards of which is the old portion. An extensive and commodious range of warehouses lines the whole length of the south side of the old docks, and the North British and Caledonian Railways are brought direct into the dock-yard. There are two companies in the town engaged in the London and Leith trade, and others in trade between Leith and Hull, Liverpool, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Dundee, Inverness, Wick, Kirkwall, Lerwick, Stirling, Helmsdale, Hamburg, Rotterdam, &c. The greater number of coasting vessels lie in the harbour, the others in the docks. The numerous steam vessels land and take on board both at Leith and Granton. The length of the east pier is 3,530 feet; the pier is built partly of wood and partly of stone; and the west pier, constructed entirely of wood, is 3,123 feet in length, given a depth of from 20 to 25 feet at high water. The principal commerce of Leith lies chiefly in its shipping, foreign and colonial trade, large quantities of grain, cattle, wines, brandies, &c., being imported. Its exports are coal, iron, spirits, and manufactured goods. The manufactures of Leith are considerable; they comprise colour and paint works, artificial manure works and bone mills, roperies, canvas, sail and soap making, sugar refining, brewing, distilling, and tanning, fish curing and coopering. Ship building is a prominent pursuit in the employment of capital and labour, and many fine vessels have been launched from the yards. Sawmills are likewise in great activity here. There are very large flour mills; also very important works for preserving provisions, the manufacture of railway engines, &c. Both the manufactures and trade of Leith have for some years past rapidly increased. The town has also extended in various directions, and is rapidly growing in wealth and prosperity. In 1800 the tonnage of Leith did not exceed 20,000 tons British register, but in 1885 the shipping owned in and hailing from the port showed a total of about 140,000 tons divided among 203 steam and sailing ships.

There are seven banking establishments, as will be seen in the list under that head. The church of North Leith stands to the westward of the town, and was erected in 1814, in place of one built in 1496; it has a lofty spire, the first compartment being of the Doric order, the second Ionic, and the third Corinthian; the height to the summit of the cross is 158 feet; the portico is a model of an Ionic temple of the Ilissus, near Athens. It can accommodate a congregation of two thousand. The inhabitants have the right of nominating their minister, whose stipend is one of the best in Scotland. St. Thomas's Church, Shirra brae, was founded and endowed by Sir John Gladstone, Bart., a native of Leith in 1840. It is a handsome building, with turret and spire. St. John's Free Church, Charlotte street, formerly a chapel of ease, is a spacious edifice. The Mariners' Free church, conveniently and appropriately situated near the docks, North Leith, is a building commodious for its purpose. Restalrig Church, rebuilt under the Church Extension Scheme, in 1837, is now in connection with St. Mary's South Leith. There are also places of worship for United Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Wesleyan Methodists, and other dissenting denominations. Among the public educational establishments are the Leith High School, erected in 1805; Dr. Bell's School, built in 1839; a boys' charity school, and one of industry for girls. The Court House is a handsome structure, situated at the corner of Charlotte street. Leith is famous as being the birthplace of George Wishart, a matryr of the Reformation, who was cruelly condemmed to the flames by order of Cardinal Beaton, at St. Andrews, in the 16th century; also that of Hugho Arnot, author of a history of Edinburgh. There are numerous charitable institutions, amongst which may be mentioned the Gladstone Asylum for Incurables; John Watt's Hospital, erected in 1862; the Lunatic Asylum, and Leith Hospital and Dispensary. There are also the High School, erected in 1806; Industrial Schools, a Philharmonic Society, and benefit associations, together with Bible and Missionary Societies, a Mechanics' Institute, having a library of over 7,000 volumes; and other libraries, baths, &c. The Town Hall, in Constitution street, was erected in 1827, at a cost of about 3,000. On the 20th September, 1883, The Earl of Mar and Kellie laid the foundation stone of a new Sailors' Home. It is situated at the corner of Tower place and Tower street, the style being that known as the old Scotch baronial. The principal elevation faces the harbour at Tower place, and is 90 feet in length, with four storeys and attics; the centre tower is 75 feet high and has provision for a clock with four illuminated dials, 7 feet in diameter; there is a coffee palace or restaurant, storeroom for seamen's effects, recreation room, reading room, and dining room. Accommodation is provided for 56 seamen and 9 officers. The building is an architectural ornament to the town, and cost about £10,200. The Custom House in the Grecian style, with a pediment and columns, is in North Leith, at the end of the lower drawbridge; it was erected in 1812, and cost £12,617; contiguous to it are extensive dock warehouses. The business of the excise office is likewise transacted within it. The Trinity House, on the west side of Kirkgate, was originally founded in 1555, and rebuilt in 1817, in the Grecian style of architecture, at an expense of £2,500. The Poorhouse, in Great Junction street, was erected in 1850, at a cost of £4,500, raised by assessment on the heritors for South Leith. Contiguous to St. Thomas's church is the hospital erected by means of a bequest of £1,000 made by a Mr. Stewart, and the like sum raised among the inhabitants. Mr. Peter Hamilton, of of Edinburgh, was the architect. Seafield Baths are situate at the eastern extremity of Leith Links; they were erected in 1813, at an expense of £3,000, raised in £50 shares. These baths are both elegant and commodious, and contain hot, cold, tepid, and shower baths.

The market places of Leith are situated a short way east from the Tolbooth, and were erected in 1819, The areas of the different markets are surrounded with neatly fitted-up stalls, and the whole has a commodious and creditable appearance. The parliamentry burgh of Leith comprises parts of the parishes of Cramond, North Leith, St. Cuthbert, and South Leith, and in 1871 contained a population of 44,280, and in 1881, 54,196.

GRANTON, situated on the Firth of Forth, is about 2½ miles N.N.W. of Edinburgh, and the same distance W. of Leith. This now important port, rapidly increasing in shipping requirements and conveniences, is the exclusive property of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1837 an Act of Parliament was obtained for the construction of a pier here—the port of Leith being ill adapted for the reception of vessels at low water. The pier, which extends 1,700 feet into the Forth, is of substantial masonry, built of stone obtained in the immediate neighbourhood. The depth within the pier at low water is from ten to twelve feet, and at high water about twenty-seven. There are extensive breakwaters, exceeding 1,000 yards in length, so that vessels can enjoy protection from the wind, from any point of the compass. One of Morton's patent slips is laid down, being one of the largest in the kingdom. Ship building is pursued on a large scale. Warehouses have been licensed for the reception of bonded goods. There is a large hotel, and the North British Railway Company have a station; and hence passengers and goods are embarked for Burntisland, whence the railway is continued to Aberdeen, &c. It was at this port (Granton) that her Majesty Queen Victoria landed on her visit to Scotland on the 1st of September, 1842. The Caledonian Railway Company has also a station at Granton, and a branch line, for goods only, running to the harbour. The population of Granton is returned with Cramond parish.

ECCLESIASTICAL DIRECTORY,

INCLUDING RELIGIOUS AND MISSIONARY SOCIETIES, &c.

Under an Act of 1838, "to secure the debt due by the City of Edinburgh to the public, to confirm an agreement between the said city and its creditors, and to effect a settlement of the said city and town of Leith," a sum of £5,680 is paid annually to the city of Edinburgh. The Commissioners, by the same Act, were to pay annually the sum of £7,680, "to be applied in the proportion of £2,000 for behoof of the ministers of the city of Edinburgh; £3,180 for behoof of the creditors of the said city; and £2,500 for behoof of the colleges and schools thereof." The annuity-tax paid to the Edinburgh ministers was abolished in 1870, the Act of Parliament authorising the Commissioners to borrow £40,000, and hand it over to the Edinburgh Ecclesiastical Commissioners in redemption of the £2,000 annually paid by them. The burgh of Leith receives annually from the Commissioners a sum of £500, in lieu of certain rates, customs, and market dues levied on imports. This is the only common good held by Leith, and it was accepted by the Corporation on the advice of Lord Murray, the first member of Parliament for the burgh.
